Yea I have observed in the Letters of greatest Malcontents from thence, foe and friend and themselves are blamed rather then the Countrey, the least finger of Virginias hand (I meane the least of fine Rivers (or as Mafter Alexander Whitakers relateth, the least of feven) in a finall part of that great Countrie, is bigger then the First-borne of Britaines waters, the famous Thames, all Nauigable, fome one hundred miles, fome one hundred and fixtie, receiving Tributes by the way of innume- 50 rable Springs, Brookes, Riverets (fuch as that of Ware, and fit for portage of Wares in imaller Barkes, of which kind lames River hath five Attendants in ordinary) the fall of every one of the fine is within twentie or fifteene miles of some other: and not aboue fifteene miles in some places is the Great River of Roanoke faid to be distant from some of those which fall into lames Riuer, yeelding a commodious intercourse twixt those Southerly and these more Northerly parts of the Countrey. I know not how Nature hath here also wantonized and danced a Loath to depart in the winding of those Streames, which feeme willingly againe and againe to embrace that beloued Soile, and to prefent her with rich Collers of filuer Eifes, murmuring that they must leave to fresh and fertile a Land, of which at last with Sals teares they take their leave, but contra-Cting with their New Sea Lord to visit their old Land-lord and former Loue every Floud Meane 60 whiles those many impetuous clippings and sweet embraces, searching refuges every way make thew as if they would meet together in confultation, and agree on some Conspiracie, which howfoeuer disappointed, yeeld neuerthelesse many conueniences of entercourse and easier porcage, each River comming within foure, eight, ten miles, more or fewer in divers places of another. The Countrey it felfe naturally produceth Vines in great abundance, and some of a very good 30 fort : divers plants also have beene sent thicker of the better kinds of Christendome, with eight Vignerous orocured from Languedock for the husbanding of that commoditie. The Soyle is no leffe naturally happy in Mulberie Trees of the best kind and some Silke-wormes also; and generall order bath beene taken for the abundant planting of them in all places inhabited; large fupply also of Silke-worme-feed from his Maiesties store, and men skilfull in that kind for the well ordering of that bufineffe haue beene fent. In a word, the very prosperity and pregnant hopes of that Plantation made the Deuil and his lims to enuy feare and hate it. Hence that bloudy Mailacre which caused almost a sudden Chaos to the hinderance of those affaires, by the convulfions, combustions, and almost confusion of that Body and their Designes: whereof yet we hope not only a recourry but greater advantage, the greatest danger from the Sauges, growing out of our mens confidence, which that terrible stroke (except a stupid Deuill possesse vs) hath cut off : which likewife requires that feruile natures be feruily vied; that future dangers be preuented by the extirpation of the more dangerous, and commodities also raised out of the seruitenesse and Sauges so feruiceablenesse of the rest.

Hence Tyrns and her Daughter Carthage of old (Matre valchra filia palebrior) hence the Egyptian Alexandria and many Nations lince, have reaped wealthand In honour. Hence the Lumbards and Easterlings sucked out the sweetes of this Kingdome in former times, whiles we like children were fed by their hands, and they were inriched by the Importation and Exportation of Merchandife to and from vs: which when that glorious Elizabeth altered, and fought to fland in the Seas on her owne legs, and to flie ouer them with her owne wings, it not only wanne her renowme but dread abroad, and fuch strength at home, that notwithitanding her manifold wars offensue and defensue, and motherly protection of her Neighbours round about with Men and Monies; her Cuftome, her Nauie, and the wealth of her prople is thought to haue received in her time a feuen-fold advancement. And what hath to long vpholden and enhanced the Hanse Townes? What hath rayled the rich and glorious States of Venice and Genea? Hee that lookes on the best Corne-fields soone after the sowing, seeth expense and labour 49 without any profit but in expectation. Now is our Seed-time; and if cost and industry want no Virginia, in her Soyle and Climate not only promifeth thele materials, there also to be made at ea ier rates; but infinite other Commodities allo which may be transplanted from these and other parts, as the Spaniards in their Indies , have given vs example. These have reserved Wines and Oyle, as Staple Commodities to be carried from Spaine (that these Americans may still have need of Spanish Commodities) which else would easily grow there. They have agains furnished these parts both from Spaine and many other Countries, with Figs, Oranges, Limons, and fruits for prefent vie and for Merchandize, with Sugar-canes, Gingers, Cattell and other Commodities, yeelding exceeding fummes of Treasure to the Planters. And I know not but in a settled Virginian Plantation, Sugars, Gingers, Hides, &c. may there prooue as gainfull, as they have 30 in the Spanish Indies, that is, beyond all conceit of ordinarie valuation, and as good as

Now for the Cattell and Fowles, I might here present their Deere of all forts, reported to haue three or foure Fawnes at a time, and none under two (which fome impute to the qualitie of ly for efective that Countrey, having happened likewise to the Goats transported from hence) and were it not for this increase, eyther they must faile, or the Natiues (these sparing neither old nor young, nor old with young, nor obseruing any rule of Season or Reason therein) I might adde Shag-haired Oxen-feene by Sir Samuell Argoll, Beauers, Otters, Foxes, Wildeand Ciuet Cats, Muske Rats, and many Beatls which beare good Furres; their large Turkeyes, Cranes, Herons, Partridges, and innumerable other Fowles: fifth also of innumerable numbers and manifold kinds, Sturgeon, Por- 60 pole, Bale, Rock-fish, Carpe, Shad, and the rest. It seemeth to vs incredible, which is related of the both numbers * and excellencie at one draught taken. As for the varietie of Corne, the excellencie alfo and multiplication to 1500. or 2000. for one stalke of Maiz, the viefulnesse, their fucceeding-exceeding Haruelts, their Roots, Herbs, Pulle, and the rest, I referre to all the Writers in

Once, the impregnable wals of the vnired Prounces are their Ships (whereof fome reckon small and great of all forts 20000,) and their principall and most generall Trade is Fishing, which is the Seminary of their Mariners of which tome have reckoned about 100000, and fummed their returnes thence growing to 7000000. pounds in a yeare. I am none of Neptunes Secretaries; yet know this, that there is no fifthing to the Sea, and no Country to strong by Sea as that which findeth most employment in this kinde, where no exportation of treasure, no custome, no confumption and exhaulting of commodities can be quarelled. Thus then, whether we confider Wines, Silkes, and other the appurtenances of our pleasures, as Dies, Drugges, Gummes, Sugars, Ginger, Furres, and the like, which cost this Kingdome yearely tome hundreths of thousands of our pounds: or whether wee reckon those 20 more staple and necessary commodities for Shipping, and all forts of Timber, Cordage, and other like, no leffe coffly, Virginia inuiteth our hopes, and couenanteth to bestow them on the induftrious : fo that we shall saue those treasures and costs that way expended, fnall lesse depend on other Nations, lesse teare imbarguing, detention, imposts; yea, shall from other Nations raise by returne of our excelle in these kindes great Summes, besides the turnishing of the Kingdome with greater encrease of Shipping, Marriners, and innumerable employments, and the securing and enriching the Ports, both of Ireland and England. As for Tobacco I have faid little of it, because 20. It is also not only viefull at all times, but necessary to these times, as to transport superfluous 22. I a ide further, that the prolecution of the Virginian Plantation, is both profitable and necesfary for the strengthning of the Plantations already begun in Summer Ilands, New England, and New found Land, and that other expected in New Scotland. Now if we adde the hopefull paliage to the South Sea, that one argument is more then all the reft, if our eyes shall once be bleffed with that defired fight. For the trade of the whole world is then made compendious, all the rich trades of the East Indies are obvious and neerer hand, and no force is able to fooure fo large a Coast as that Westerne shoare of all America, and secure it from our trading. Hence, if we finde not golden Countries before not possessed by other Christians (whereof alfo Sir Francis Drakes Noua Albion fo long fince fubiected by voluntary furrender to the English Crowne, hath given vs hope) yet trade will bring the Mines of the West into our 10 fhips, and the Spices and other rich Merchandize of the East into our shops at easier charge, and therefore faleable at eafier rates.

25.Noreffitie of maintain ning Virginia in cale of war forcidity others.

But this Designe of the South Sea may seeme desperate, and the Argument ridiculous. I shall therefore indepour to give better light therein, and withall to adde another Argument as weightie as it, and greater then all exceptions.

I may adde also the case of Warre, which I defire not; but which may happen, and Bellona may even now feeme pregnant and alreadic conceived, whose abortion might be wished, if necessitie add not honour to the lawfulneffe, I but propound a cale possible. The most certaine, honorable, and beauteous front of Peace, hath a backe part of Warre, and therefore in securest Peace, Prudence is not to fecure, but the armeth her felfe against feares of War, forewarning and forearming men by the Sword drawne to preuent the drawing of Swords, and eyther eschewes it, or reads good out of it.

It is not voknowne what expenses England hath sustained in and ever since Sir Sebastian Ca. South Sea why let is not vinknowne what expenses of the Willoughby, Burrough, Pet and Iackman by the Northeast , of Hudson, Poole, Fotherby, and diversother Naugations by the North; of Sir Martine Frobufter, Captaine Danies, Sir Thomas Button, Maiter Knight, Hudfon, Hall, Baffin, and other manifold Discoueries by the North-west, all seeking a compendious passage to Cashay, and to the East Indies. The Reasons which movued them were far more hopefull then that of Columbus, which found not with standing far better and speedier successe. Successe is a seruile Argument, for Sense rather then for Reaton, and in this whole Virginian proiect, I ipeake to English Aduenturers, and not to pettie Pedlers, or Vinginian Sauages, to fuch whose eyes are in their heads and not in their hands : Careat successibus opto, Quisquis abenentu facta notanda putet. Yet hath not Succeffe beene wholy frustrate, yea both Reason and Sense plead for a Passage, and Virginias vietulneffe therein.

I will not bring uncertaine testimonies of a Portugall taken in a Carrike in Queene Elizabeths dayes, and of another Portugall in Guinie, which affirmed to Sir Martine Frebufher that hee had past it; nor of Garcia Louisa, which is said by the Coast of New-found-land to have gone to the Molnecas; nor of Vafeo Coronado in his Letter to the Emperour Charles, and other antiquated

Witneffes of Antiquitie. I have already in due place produced * Thomas Cowles, luan de Fuca, Thomas Dermer, Sir Thomas 40 Button, Mafter Brigges, besides the constant and generall report of all the Sauages from Florida, to the great River of Canada. Now for the hopes of Virginia by a South-Sea Discovery, how neere is England that way to the Trade of both Indies, that is, of all the remoter World! It flands midway betwixt vs and the most frequented Ports of the West, which perhaps may shortly come to full age and fue out her Liuerie, how ever hitherto kept in close Wardship, and debarred the rights of common humanite, that is, the commerce with other Nations, without differning Friend and Foe. Strange iealouse and worthy of seasous Suspicion! to admit Trade in all European Ports, not Simil and Madrid excepted, and to prohibit the same in all the East and West, where it can leffe be prohibited! there to repute all in nature of Pyrats, and accordingly to make 50 prize of ships, goods, and men which shall attempt to sayle that vail Ocean, or offer Trade in any of those Habitations But leauing that to consideration of my Betters, in the East both Englife and Dutch have maintayned their just Trade by force, which by vinust force was denied, and have paid themselves largely for all losses sustayined by the Insultings or Assaultings of those Monopolians, with gaine, with honour : that trade being almost denied to those injurious deniers, their owne reputation and traffique now bleeding, which would have cut the throates of all others aduentures, of all other aduenturers. I neither prophelie, nor exhort vnto the like in the Weil: Our prudent and potent Mother Elizabeth wan renowne and wealth in their owne harbours and Cities at home, and no leffe in the remotest of their Lands and Seas, Yea, the South Sea by furthest compasse was neere to her long and just armes, and their Cacaplain and Saint Anne, 62 with other their richest Ships and Ports were ransacked by English Cacafnegos, and the charges of those warres borne by those enemies which caused them. Nulla falies belle paceus to poseimus omnes. He whole words and workes hath euer beene Beati pacifici, knowes best when and how to exact his and the Worlds right, in the World, of which God hath granted a Monopoly to no man; and (if others can embrace the whole Globe with dispersed habitations) not to suffer his long arms

to be shortned, and the strong armes of his to be pinioned, and forced to accept of a bounded and limited commerce in a little corner at others pleafure. Once, in inft and even peace, Virginia ffands fit to become Englands Factor in America; it war thould happen, both it and Bermuda are fit Sentimels and Scours, yea fit Searchers and Customers, fit Watch-towers and Arfenals to maintaine right against all wrong-doers. And for the South Sea, if a passage be found neere vnto Virginia. Malter Dermer was confident upon relations (as he writ to me) of a thousand witnesses, wee then lee Ungunes lap open, yeelding her Ports and Harbours for the Easterne treasures to be the negret way conneied by the West, Years it be more remote, as Chacke and Fuca relate, yet hath Virginia an vietall neighbourhood both for ticke men, weatherbeaten Ships, and prouisions ex-10 hauft in long Voyages, to make them fitter for returne. And if fuch paffage were not at all. vet the Mountaines of Virginia cannot but fend Rivers to that Sea; fo that as the wealth of Permis brought to Panama, and thence by Land convaied to the Ports of this Sea, fo may the wealth of the South Sea, and the Regions of the West of America be that way passed to English hands. The like may be faid of the Hands of Salomon, the South vinknowne Continent, which aftertimes may discover (probably as rich as the rest) that I mention not the knowne Regions of the East already traded. And although the passage be not yet perfectly knowne, vet may the feations and fittest opportunities and promitions for that discovery be most easie from Virginia: and there, if croffed with stormes or other diasters, they may finde securest refuge and refreshing. And if (which God auert) we may not have the wares of peace, yet the peace of warres 20 (that is, a fit rendenous and retiring place, where to cheere and hearten, to repaire and hipply vpon all occasions) is there offered, by the advantages of both Seas. For in both, that walt body must needes be of flow motion, where the limmes are so discoynted, and one member whit to helpe another by remotenesse. And if it should but force the adversary to maintaine

Garrilons in his Ports on both fides, to fecure them from inualion, and a double Nauie of War in both Seas , the one to fecure the Coalts, the other to fecure his Shippes in the South Sea paffing from the Philippings, or from one Port to another; and in the North Sea to wafte his Treatures and Merchandile into Europe, the wings of that Eigle would be fo pulled with fuch costs, that hee could not easily make invasive flight voon his neighbours in these parts; yez, both thole and these Dominions would be exposed to the easier inualions of others. Tam Marte, quam Mercurio, in Peace and Warre, fo viefull may Virginia and Bermuda be to this Kingdome. Now if any fay Medice curateipfum, and alleadge that they themselves are not able to fland against an enemy : I answere, first, for Bermuda, or Summer Hands, that little body is all heart, and hath the ftrentgh of Nature and Art confpiring her impregnableneffe. For the Rockes every way have to fortified the feituation, that the would laugh at an Armada, at a World of Ships, where the ileaught paffage admits not two Shipsabreaft to enter, and hath ten Forts with Ordnance to entertaine them. She feares no rauithment, and as little needes the familhment, so that voleffe God for our finnes, or the Diuell by the worft of finnes, treaton, and the worft of his Sonnes, fome Indar, expose her to the Enemy, the can know no other lone or Lord but English. And for Virginia 40 against the Savages greatest fright, Captaine Smith maintained himselfe without loffe, with gaine with thety eight men ragainst others she hath so sit places for fortification; so sit meanes and materials to fecure her, as eye-witnesses report, that the worst of enemies to be feared is English backwar heffe or frowardnesse, like Sampsons Foxes either drawing backe, or having fire at their tongues ends.

Now if Queene Elizabeth of glorious memory, were able from England onely to annoy her * M. Thus worthily that worthy man, of the Worthy of women in her time. Great and glorious Elizabeib! how didff thou contemne the Iberian threates? How didft thou invert, dinert, subvert their attempts? How victoriously didst thou evade their inuinoible Invalion! how. Q Elizabeths didft thou inuade the Inuaders, at their gates, in their ports? how didft thou meete them in the praces, Atlanticke, purior them to the South, to the Indian Seas, and round about the World's How did the skie, windes, waves ferue to a higher providence in thy deliveries, in thy triumphs? how often were the prodigious Carrikes of the East, and prodigall Vellels of the West, either staid at 60 home for feare, or driven to fort-covert by the way, or colly wafted on their way, or borned in the way, or finke out of the way, or carried quite a way to visite the English shoares, and adorne the Trophees of great and glorious Elizabeth? Rouze vp your braue spirits English hearts in loyall fabrication to your Royall Sourraign: be ready to offer right, feare not to fuffer wrong: feeke the good, and see the goods which Virginia offers. Here could I wilder my felfe in thickets of arguments, and could Muster more motiues and more necessarily concluding for Virginias advancement, if that which we defire not be enforced on vs, then I have already numbred in plantation and commerce : Yea almost all those former arguments are presed of necessity, or offer their feruice voluntarily, some more, others no leffe seruiceable that way, then to publike peace and traffique, which also are securest when they neede not feare a Warre.

The honour of Religion defended by the Defender of the Faul; of our Nation, King, Kingdome; the Materials of Snips, Mariners, Armes, Victuals; Filhing, Merchandife, and Prize fublerment to each Voyage, that one may supply if the other faile; in crossed Voyages, a convenient receptacle for refreshing; fit place of stay in not fitting and vnseasonable seasons : a late repository for spoiles sotten in expectation of greater purchafe: a redreffe to weatherbeaten and storme-distressed to Ships : a refuge to fuch as the enemy hath battered and endangered ; an Hoipitall for ficke, wounded, and prefently unfer iceable Mariners and Souldiers : a storehouse to repaire Timbers, Tackling, and other prouisions to Ships and Men: a fit meane (in supplying vs from thence with neceffaries) to keepe those Monies in our owne hands, whereby we are destitute of the principall sie newes of warre, yea perhaps the enemy armed against vs : a schoole and training place for our youth to endure labour and hardthip, and to prepare them like the lewes in Nebemiabs time. to vie the Sword with one hand, and inftruments of labour in the other: an exercise to breede Men for longer Voiages: a backed ore to breake out fuddenly on the enemy; an ambush ment, whiles Ships from hence & thence shall at once be exp. Cted, and he which flees the one shall fall into the other: a redoubling of our forces when they meete: a fafe halbour in Bermada or in Virginia for 20 a hundred failes, or many more, to awaite all opportunities : a place likely to yeelde to men of merit entertainment and reward : a place yeelding opportunity by trade there to weaken our possible or probable enemies, to whom now wee seeke for trade, and consequently to weaken them by the want of our Commodities, and to adde a double strength to our selues : a place commodious to preuent warre by diverting it, to divert it by preventing: to subvert the enemies Plantations by fudden affaults, or force them to coftly Garifons: to euert their Merchandifing by trade sufpended, surprized, or defended with chargeable waftage : to intercert their intelligence and profits : to invert the hearts of Malecontents, and those hands which feare now curbeth and brideth: to concert to our parts those which maintaine a fugitive and wilde enmity with them: to avert the profits of their Mines by other imployments; and in a word, to make that vie of 2d others against them, which their examples have taught vs in acquiring the great Empires of Mexico and Pers, with other parts of America, which wirhout the helpe of Indians against Indians, banding themselves with a contrary faction, such handfuls had never beene able to have effected : What shall I say more ! If others impotence and importunities force a War, Virginia and Summer Ilands seeme to this English body as two American hands, eares, feete; two eyes for defence : two Keyes (asbefore is laid) for offence : two Armes to get, encompaffe, embrace : two Fifts to strike: the Sword and Dagger; Ship and Pinnace; Caitle and Rampire, Canon & Musket, Arsenale and Peere, and what societ God shall please to give to humaine industry, who gives all things of free grace, but to fuch to whom he hath given grace freely to feeke them; and isalway a facile and easie giver, but to them onely which love not their ease and idle pleasure. And although I am no Secretary of Gods Counfell for the Indies, yet event hath revealed thus much of his will, that no other Christian Nation hath yet gotten and maintained possession in those parts, but the English: to whom therefore wee may gather their decreed feruiceablenesse in Peace, aduantagiousnelle in Warre, and opportunity for both, to be both Magazine and Bulwarke, and ready even by naturall scituation to sit on the skires of whatsoever enemies, which passe from 4. merica to Europe. Three Spanish witnesses, Acosta, Oniedo, and Herrora, have related this, in describing the course of that Nauigation; yea, all experience, the Heavens also and Elements subscribe to it. For such is the statute of the windes, which all Shipping in that Sea must obey : they must goe one way and returne another. To the Indies the course from Europe is by the Canaries, and thence entring 50 Defert, of Ind. the Trop ke, they meete with the Brifes, which are perpetual Easterne windes, or I know not what impetuofity by the motion of the heavens breathed into the lower aire between the Tropikes, and preffing all vapours and exhalations unto that feruice in one or other point Easterly: ane pries and which force the Ships to returne neerer the American coaft there to feeke as it were some alloy of course of Na. that impetuous motion (euen as you see Water-men in the Thames rowing against the tide, to couet neere the shoare where the tide is weakest) and thence passing the Tropike to seeke Westerly windes, which from twenty feuen to thirty feuen doe there viually remaine, as wee fee in Eddies caused by stronger motions. Thus the Spanish Ships on the South Sea make one way from Acapulco to the Philippinas, which is the Tropicke; and another without in the height of Ispan, to returne. And thus in the Atlanticke the Ships from their feuerall ports come to the Ha- 60 Mana in Guba, and thence must take their course neere to Virginia and Summer Ilandi, to finde the Azores: in which way, from thence it is easie for English Ships (not far from their owne home or Ports) to difperse themselues in expretation of a surprisall.

The want of fuch helpes in Queene Elizabeths glorious times, enforced our men of Warre fill to awaite both for the Indian Carrickes, and all American Ships, houering about the Azores Ilands fubicet to the Spanish Crowne, where they neither had harbour in stormes, nor could in any to our objects wants refresh themselves with water, victuals, or other provisions but by force; where a greater warre by want and fronger Armada of the enemy waited to wafte home their Ships returning; where it often of firme fuch hanned that the Ships could not fo foone be descried, but they gat either into some Port, and vn. Plantation as der some Fort which secured them; or else there ran themselves aground, and saving what they be whence may could with their persons, fired the rest, so to facrifice it to Neptune or Vulcan, rather then permit by Voyages it to English hands. Neither had the English any neere Port where to fupply themselves in any di- were frugrafirefle, or exhaultion of prouitions, but must necessarily returne home for England, if not (as some red in partor times) perishing in the way, with little or perhaps no prize attained. Likewise in long Voya- wholly. ges, as to the East Indies, and to the South Sea, having no harbour to friend every difeate proved mortall to their Voyage, and forced at left a returne, that is, a miscarrying of the designe, if not of themselves: whereas, such a refuge as Virginia and Summer Hands might either have recovered the Voyage intended, or refreshed and inabled them to make as good a purchase you the enemy, making him to pay their charges, perhaps with more gaine then the fift intents could have produced. Examples will make this more evident.

And first to begin with the first of our great Discouerers; Sir Sebast ian Cabot, and Sir Thomas Anno 1$17. Pert, were let forth by King Henry the eight (as before is mentioned) in a Voyage of American Quiedo Gen. 57 Discouery, a Ship of which Fleete comming from the coast of Brasil to Domingo (Quedo mentian one it in the Spanish file, branding them with Piracy, yet laieth nothing to their charge but difcouery and offer of trade, paying with Pewter diffies for what they tooke) was thence repelled Anno 1 517, and obtained fome provisions at Saint lobn, from whence in their returne to England, Oniedo thinkes they perished: at least the Voyage miscarried, as appeareth by Master Thornes and Master Edens testimony thereof, for want of provisions. The like happened to Ma- Master Hore. fter Hores Voyage, described in Master Hakluit Anno 1536, when want of victuals made them Sir 10. Hamkins, eate one another, and at last to steale a French Ship, in which they returned.

Anno 1864. Sir John Hawkins having made a profitable Voyage by fale of Negros on the coast Townes of America, was driven to feeke reliefe of the French (then planted in Florida, rooted thence not long after by Spanish butchery) And in another Voyage 1567, incurred by perfidious treachery of the Spaniards, a most lamentable disaster, He then failed in the lefus of Lubecke, having to his conforts, the Minion, the William and John, the Indith, the Angell and the Swallow, Hauing gotten Negros in Guinnee and made his market in the Spanish Indies, he put in for reliefe at Saint John de VIbus. Whiles his Fleete was there, the Spanife Fleete came thither with their new Viceroy, which he could easily have kept out of the harbour, but there being then no Warres betwixt England and Spaine, certaine Articles were concluded betwixt them; from which the Spanishperfidie V. ceroy perfidiously resulting, with close trechery (contrary to his faith plighted) affaulted the English with a ftrong power on the fudden; the iffue whereof was the firing, drowning, taking many of the English, whom they put alio to execrable tortures. Onely the Minion and Judith of that whole Fleete escaped, if it be an escaping to avoide Serlla and rush on Charibdis. For they ao were fo shaken in fight first, after with stormes, lastly and worst of all, with famine, that they were forced to expose a hundred and source eene men to the mercy of cruell elements, crueller Sauages, cruellest Spaniards, who exercised in the Inquisition with bondage, rackes, whips, fires, Spanistic ruelles familhments, & plurima moreis imago, what the other had spared; so that of a hundred and source teene not about the odde foure, and those foure after Odyffes of wandrings, and Iliades of mileries returned home from the foure corners of the World, Had Sir John Hawkins had a Virginian opportunity of refreshing, the first danger should not have needed, and the last had not proved worse then the first : that exposing being not farre from the Virginian shoare, and the current fitting to carry him thither. Sir Francis Drake was then Captaine of the Iudith, and repaired that courtefie to the Spaniards after, who to shew the felibility of such tefreshing Anno 1585. having facked Saint lago, Domingo, Carthagena, and Saint Augustine, returned by Virginia to relieue the East Indies. Their Company were so weakened with sicknesse, that the Viceadmirall was sent backs from Soldania with ficke men. The Admirall was loft, the Rereadmirall returned, and for want of prouisions put ouer from Saint Helena to Trindad, in hope of reliefe. Yet being there difappointed, they intended to get to Newfoundland, but being croffed with ftormes in the way, and forced backe to Port Ricco, the Ship was driven away and loft not far from Mona, whiles the famished Company were seeking refreshing (which how easily had a Bermuda or Virginia supplied, 60 had an English plantation flourished there?) There Ships were voheard of in England, vntill a Letter of Alcafar de Villa fenner, Auditor of Domingo, writ to the King his Master, being by an English Ship intercepted, gaue intelligence of one of enole two Ships which diffressed for want of necessaries, by mortality, had foure men only left abus in her, which feeking reliefe, put themselves into their Boate, and comming on shoare in the Hand Vinus, not farre from Domingo, with Iewels and great riches, confelled that they had esken three Portugall prizes. The Spaniards at first received them on good conditions, but some 10 villaines feeing their wealth, mutthered them, for which this Auditor had fentenced Roderico de Fuentes, with others, as his Letter to the King of Spane importeth. Now had there then beenea Voginian or Bermudan Plantation, how easily might they have attained thither(the Boat at least) and elcaped that butchery ? I could hither adde instructions from the English Indian Ships 1604. and 1608, from Captaine Fenton 1582, from the Eirle of Cumberlands Voyages before selated in the yeares 86.89.91.93.96.97. and from Master Candish, Matter Danis, and others.

I seeke the good and not the goods of England and Virginia, I follow the land of God, which have given England io many rights in Voginia, right naturall, right nationall, right by first discouery, by accepted trade, by possession surrendred voluntarily, continued constantly, right by gift, by birth, by bargaine and fale, by cession, by forfeiture in that late dampable trechery and maffacte, and the fatal possession taken by so many murthered English. Gods an bounty before, his inflice now hath given vs Virginia, that we should so in indgement remember mercy, as to gine Vinginia againe to God, in Christian acknowledgement of his goodnesse and mercy, of his word and workes, and in our owne more ferious convertion to prepare that of Virginia. God goeth before vs in making this designe honorable to Religion, to Humanity, to our

AND NEW-FOVNDLAND, WITH THE PATENT AND VOYAGES TO

NEW SCOTLAND: Relations also of the Fleets (et forth by Queene Elizabeth against the Spaniards.

THE TENTH BOOKE.

CHAP. I.

A briefe Relation of the Discourie and Plantation of New-England: and of fundry Accidents therein occurring, from the yeere of our Lord 1607. to this present 1622. Published by the Prefident and Councell, and dedicated to the Princes Highnesse here ab-

Hen this Defigne was first attempted, fome of the prefent Company were therein chiefly intereffed; who being carefull to have the fame accomplished, did fend to the discouery of those Northern parts a braue Gentleman, Cap. Henry Challons, with two of the Natiues of that Territorie, the one called Maneday, theother Affecomet. But his misfortunes did expose him to the power of certaine ftrangers, enemies to his proceedings, fo that by them, his Company were feized, the ships and goods conflicated, and that Voyage wholly ouerthrowne.

This loffe, and vnfortunate beginning, did much a- 1. Ca. Challer bate the rifing courage of the first Aduenturers; but im-mediately upon his departure, it pleased the Noble Lord Chief Euslie Chiefe Iuflice, Sir John Popham Knight, to fend out anothershippe, wherein Captayne Thomas Hanam went

Commander, and Martine Prinne of Bristow Master, with all necessary supplyes, for the seconding of Captayne Challens and his people; who arriving at the place appointed, and not finding that Captayne there, after they had made some Discouerie, and sound the Coasts Hanens, and Harbours answerable to our delires, they returned Vpon whose Relation the Lord Chiefe luftice, and we all waxed so confident of the businesse, that the yeere following every man of any worth, formerly interested in it, was willing to joyne in the charge for the sending over a competent number of people to lay the ground of a hopefull Plantation. Hereupon Captaine Popham, Captaine Rawler Gilbert, and others were fent away with two 2. Cap Portum thips, and an hundred Landmen, Ordnance, and other prouisions necessary for their suftentation & Cap, Gauers. and defence; vntill other supply might be sent. it pleased God to take vs from this worthy member, the Lord Chiefe Iustice, whose sudden death did so aftonish the hearts of the most part of the Aduenturers, as some grew cold, and some did wholly abandon the bufineffe. Yet Sir Francis Pophams his Sonne, certaine of his private fr.ends. and other of vs. omitted not the next yeere (holding on our first resolution) to joyne in fending forth a new supply, which was accordingly performed.

But the fhips arriuing there, did not only bring vincomfortable newes of the death of the Lord Chiefe luftice, together with the death of Sir John Gilbert, the elder Brother vinto Captaine Rawley Gilbert, who at that time was Prefident of that Councell : But found that the old Cap-Captaine Pop. taine Popham was also dead ; who was the onely man (indeed) that died there that Winter. wherein they indured the greater extremities; for that, in the depth thereof, their Lodgings and flores were burnt, and they thereby wondroutly diffreffed. This calamitie and cuill newes, together with the resolution that Captaine Gilbert was forced to take for his owne seturne (in that he was to succeed his Brother, in the Inheritance of his Lands in England) nade the whole Company to retolue vpon nothing but their returne with the thing; and for that prefent to leave that Countrey againe, having in the time of their abode there (notwithflanding the coldnesse of the season, and the small helpe they had) built a prettie Barke of their owne, weich served them to good purpose, as eating them in their returning.

The arrivall of thefe people here in England, was a wonderfull discouragement to all the first undertakers, in fo much as there was no more speech of settling any other Plantation in those Sir Fr. Posbam. parts for a long time after : only Sir Francis Popham having the ships and provision, which remayned of th Company, and supplying what was necessary for his purpose, sent divers times to the Coaits for Trade and fithing; of whose losse or gaines himselfe is best able to diately tooke the opportunisie to tettle themselves within our limits; which beeing heard of by those of Virginia, that differently tooke to their consideration the inconveniences that might arife, by I ffering them to harbour there, they dispatched Sir Samuel Areall, with Committon to displace them, which he performed with much discretion, judgement, valour, and dexteritie. For having feized their Forts, which they had built at Mount Manfell, Saint Croix, and Port Reall, he carried away their Ordnance; he alfo fürprifed their Ship, Cattle, and other Prous- 20 fions, which he transported to the Colonie in Virginia, to their great benefit. And hereby hee hath made a way for the prefent hopefull Plantation to be made in Nona Scotia, which we heare his Majeffie hath lately granted to Sir William Alexander Knight, one of his Majeffies most Honorable Councell of the Kingdome of Scotland, to be held of the faid Crowne, and that not withour some of our prinities, as by approbation under writing may and doth appeare. Whereby it is manifest that wee are so farre from making a Monopoly of all those Lands belonging to that Coast (as hath beene scandalously by some objected) That wee wish that many would undertake the like.

In this Interim there were of vs who apprehended better hopes of good that might enfine by this attempt, being thereunto periwaded, both by the Relations of our people that had induted 40 the many difficulties whereunto fuch actions are fubicated chiefly in the Winter Seafon; and like. wife by the informations given them by certaine of the Natives, that had beene kept a long time in their hands; wherefore we refolued once more to trie the veritie thereof, and to lee if possibly we might finde some thing that might induce a fresh resolution to prosecute a Worke so prous and so honourable. And thereupon they dispatched Captayne Hobson, of the Ile of Wight, toimployed with gether with Captayne Herley, Mafter John Matthew, Mafter Sturton, with two Saurges, the one called Epenon, the other Manamet, with Commission and directions fit for them to observe and follow, the better to bring to palle what was expected. But as in all humane affaires, there is nothing more certaine, then the vncercaintie thereof; fo fell it out in this; for a little before fuch time as they arrived upon the Coast with the foresaid Sauages, who were Naturals of these parts, 50

Cap. Hebfen Cap. Herley, e. 1611.

Hunts Sauage it happened there had beene one Hunt (a worthlelle fellow of our Nation, fet out by certaine bunting of Sa. Merchants for loue of gaine, who, not content with the commoditie he had by the filh, and peacemages.

honestie had put themselues into his hands. And stowing them under Hatches, to the number of twentie foure, carried them into the Straits, where he fought to fell them for flaues, and fold Friers charitie, as many as he could get mony for. But when it was vnderstood from whence they were broughts the Friers of those parts took the rest from them, and kept them to be instructed in the Christian Faith; and so disappointed this vieworthy fellow of the hopes of gaine he conceived to make by this new and Deuillish project.

This being known by our two Sauages, formerly spoken of, they presently contracted such Wicked offices an hatred against our whole Nation, as they immediately studied how to be reuenged; and conof wickedness triued with their friends the best meanes to bring it to passe; but Managet dying in a short time after the shippes arrivall there, and the other objecting the good order, and strong guard our able Trade he found among the Sauages, after he had made his dispatch, and was ready to fet layle more Sauage-like then they) feized upon the poore innocent creatures, that in confidence of his people kept, studied only how to free himselfe out of our hands, and thereupon laid the plot very orderly, and indeed effected his purpose, although with so great hazard to himselfe and friends. that laboured his refcue, that Captayne Hobson and his whole Company imagined hee had beene flame. And though in the recourry of his bodie they wounded the Master of our thip , and diners other of our Company, yet was not their Deligne without the flaughter of fome of their people, and the hurts of other, compassed, as appeared afterward.

Hercupon Captaine Hobson and his Company, conceiving the end of their attempt to bee frufrate, resolved without more adoe to returne, and so those hopes, that charge and Voyage was loit alfo, for they brought home nothing but the newes of their euill successe of the vnfortunate caule thereot, and of a Warre now new begun betweene the Inhabitants of those parts and vs. A milerable comfort for so weake meanes as were now left, to pursue the conclusion of so redious, an Enterprise.

While this was a working, we found the meanes to fend out Captaine Tohn Smith from Plan- Cap. J. Smith month, in a ship, together with Matter Dermer, and divers others with him . to lav the foundation of a new Plantation, and to try the fifting of that Coast, and to feeke to feetle 2 Trade with the Natiues : But such was his mistortune, as being scarce free of our owne Coast, he had his Maits shaken ouer-board by stormes and tempests, his ship wonderfully distressed, and in that extremitie forced to come backe againe; fo as the featon of the yeare being almost frent, wee were of necessitie enforced to furnish him with another ship, and taking out the provision of the 20 first, dispatched him away againe, who comming to the height of the Westerne Hands, was chated by a French Pirace, and by him made Prisoner, although his ship in the night escaped away. and returned with the lolle of much of her promision, and the overthrow of that Voyage, to the ruine of that poore Gentleman Captayne Smith, who was detayned Prisoner by them, and forced to fuffer many extremities, before he got free of his troubles. Notwithstanding these Disasters, it pleased God so to worke for our incouragement againe, as he tent into our hands Talquantum, one of those Savages that formerly had beene betrayed by this vinworthy Hans before named by whose means there was hope conceined to worke a peace betweene vs. and his friends, they beeing the principall Inhabitants of that Coaft, where the fire was kindled. But this Sauage Tofquantum, being at that time in the New-found-land with 20 Captaine Mafen, Gouernour there for the vodertakers of that Plantation : Mafter Darmer Cap, Mofen (who was there alio, and fometimes before imployed as wee haue faid by vs, together with Governor in Captayne lobn Smith) found the meanes to give vs intelligence of him, and his opinion of the New found land good vie that might bee made of his Employment, with the readinesse of Captayne Majon, to further any of our Attempts that way, eyther with Boates or other prouision necessarie. and refoluing himfelfe to goe from thence, aduited vs to fend fome to meete with him at our vfuall place of filhing; to ayde him in his indeuour, that they joyning together, might bee able to doe what he hoped would be very acceptable vnto all wel-wishers of that businesse. Vpon this newes, we dispatched the next season Cap. Rocraft, with a company for that purpose, in hope Cap. Rocraft. to have met with Captaine Darmer; but the care and discretion of Cap, Majon was such, finding An Captayne Darmers refolution to goe beyond his meanes, that he perswaded him first to go for

England, that prouiding himselfe there, as was requisite, hee might proceed in time expedient, which counfell he observed (as fit it was) although our expectation of his joyning with Captaine Rocrafe was thereby disappointed. Yet so it happened, that Captaine Rocrafe at his arrivall in thole parts, met with a French Barke that lay in a Creeke a fifthing , and trading , which hee feized on , and fent home the Mafter and Company in the fame thip which hee went out in. French feized,

With this Barke and his owne Company, he meant to keepe the Coast that Winter quarter, being very well fitted both with Salt, and other necessaries for his turne : but as this was an Act of extremitie (the poore man being of our owne Religion) fo succeeded it accordingly. For in a short time after, certaine of this Captaynes Company, conspired together to cut his throate, and to make themselves Masters of the whole spoyle, and so to seeke a new Fortune where they so could best make it. This Conspiracie being discouered to the Caprayne, he let it go on, till the Conspiracie time that it should have beene put in execution, when her caught them in their owne traine, and so apprehended them in the very instant that they were purposed to begin their Massacre. But after hee had preuented the mischiefe, and seized vpon the Malefactors, hee tooke to his confideration what was best to bee done with them. And being loth by himfelfe to dispatch them as they deserved, hee resolved to put them a shoare, thinking by their hazard, that it was politible they might discouer iomething, that might advance the publike; and so giving them some Armes for their defence, and some victuals for their suflentation, virtill they knew better how to prouide for themselves, hee lest them a place Conspirators

60 called Sawaguatock, where they remayned not long, but got from thence to Menchighon, an tock Menching. Hand lying some three leagues in the Sea, and fitteene leagues from that place, where they hon. remayned all that Winter, with bad lodging, and worse fare, yet came all safe home saue one fickely man, which dyed there, the reft returned with the Shippe wee lent for Rocrafts fupply and prouition, to make a Fifting Voyage.

After these fellowes were landed, the Captaine finding himselfe but weakely man'd, and his Ship to draw too much water to Coast those places, that by his instructions hee was affened to discouer, hee resolved to goe for Virginia, where he had lived a long time before, and had (as hee conceined) many friends, that would helpe him with some things that hee had occasion to vie. Arriung there, he was not deceived of his expectation; for Sir Samuel Argallbeing their Governour, and one that respected him much for his owne sake was the readier to helpe him, in regard of the good hee wished to the businesse wherein he was imployed.

But all this could not prevaile, for after that Sir Samuel Argall came from thence (hisdenarture, being more sudden then was expected) it fell out that the new Gouernour entred the Harbour : and finding Rocraft ready to bee gone, fent to him to command him to come abourd to to fpeake with him, which hee readily obeyed, as foone as hee could fit his boat and men for that purpose. And so leaving his Barke with her great Anker at head, and taking with him the halfe of his company, he was forced to stay aboard the new Gouernors Ship that night. In the meane while a florme arising, our Barke wanting hands to doe their labour, droue a shoare, and there funke. But yet the Gouernour and Captaine fo laboured the next day, when they knew thereof, as that they freed her againe, but that occasion forced our Captain to stay so long in the Countrey to fit himselfe a new, as in the interim a quarrell fell out betweene him and another of that Fouraff figine, place; to as Rocraft was flame, and the Barke lunke the fecond time, and finally disabled from veelding vs any benefit to this prefent.

Can Darmer. yoiage.

But we not knowing this ditafter, and Captain Darmer arriving with his Sauage out of New- 20 found land, dispatched him away the next leason, in a Ship wee sent againe for the fishing busnelle, and affigned him a company to joyne with Rocraft and his people. Captain Darmer arming there, and not finding Rocraft, was a little peoplexed, and in doubt what to doe; yet hearing by thole Mutiners which hee found there, that hee was gone for Virginia; he was hopefull of his returne; and lived in that expectation, till fuch time as he heard (by a Ship that came from thence to fifth for the Colony) the confusion of his fortune, and the end of his misery in this world. Then hee determined to take the Pinnace, that the yeere before was affigned to Rocraft, for him to make the Trade with, and with her to proceed on his defigne, and so embarked himselfe and his prouision and company in her. And leaving the Fisher-men to their labour, he coasted the shoare from thence, fearthing every Harbour, and compassing every Cape-land, till hee arrived in Un- 30 ginia; where hee was in hope to meet with some of the promition, or company of Rocraft, to help Necessi ie of a to supply him of what hee wanted ; as also to lay a Decke vpon his Pinnace, that before had not any, and now was taught by experience the necessitie of having that defect supplied.

Deck in Pinnaces of disco-

But those hopes failed him (all being before that time ruined and dispersed) so farre, as he saw it in vaine to hope for helpe by that meanes, and therefore attempted to make the best of what hee hid of his owne. And going to fet his men a worke, they all in few dayes after their arrivall, fell ficke of a difease which happed at that time in the Countrey, so as now he was not onely forced to be without hope of their helping of him, but must labour himselfe all hee could to attend and sustaine them; but so God savoured him, that they recovered, and in time convenient he dispatched his businesse there, and put himselfe to Sea againe, resoluing to accomplish in his jour- 40 ney backe to New-England, what in his last Discouery he had omitted. In his passage he met with certaine Hollanders, who had a trade in Hudsons River some yeeres before that time, with whom he had conference about the state of that coast, and their proceedings with those people: whose antivere gaue him good content. Hee betooke him felfe to the following of his bulineffe, discouering many goodly Rivers, and exceeding pleafant and fruitfull Coasts and Ilands, for the space of eightie leagues from East to West, for to that Coast doth range along, from Hudfons River to Cape lames.

New Patent thought on.

Now after wee had found by Captaine Rocrafts relation made the yeere before, the hopes hee conceived of the benefits that Coast would afford, towards the vpholding of the charge for fetling our Plantation, by reason of the commodities arising by Fishing and Furres, if a course might 50 bee taken for the managing of that bufineffe, as was fit for fuch a defigne; as well as for the aduancement of the publike good of our whole Nation, and latisfaction of every well disposed perfon that had a will to be interreffed therein. It was held to be most convenient to ilrengthen out felues by a new Giant to bee obtained from his Royal Maiefly: the rather, finding that those of Unginia had by two feuerall Patents fetled their bounds, and excluded all from intermedling with them that were not free of their Company; and had wholly altered the forme of their Gouernment, from the first ground layed for the managing she affaires of both Colonies, leaving vs as delperate, and our hufinefle as abandoned. Theie confiderations (as is faid) together with the necessicie of feeling our affaires, bounds and limits, dictinct from theirs, made vs resolue to parition his Maiestie for the renewing of our Grant. By which time the rumour of our hopes was so 60 publikely (pread abroad, and the commodities of the Fish and Trade so looked into, as it was defired that all that Coalt might bee made free, as well to those of Virginia, asto vs to make their commoditie: How just or valual that motion was, wee will not argue, feeing the businesse is ended. By this meanes our proceedings were interrupted, and wee questioned about it; first, by the

CHAP.2. Patent renewed; peaceable flantation; tractable people.

Counfell of Virginia, whom wee thought to have been fully fatisfied therein, before wee could haue way given vs for a new Patent, both parties having beene heard by certaine of the Lords of the Councell; and the businesse by them so ordered, as wee were directed to proceed and to have our Grantagreeable to the libertie of the Virginia Company, the trame of our government excepted; but this order not being liked of, it was againe heard and concluded. Laftly, the Patene being past the Seale, it was stopt upon new suggestions to the King, and by his Maiesty referred to the Councel to be feeled, by whom the former Orders were confirmed, the difference cleared and we ordered to have our Patent delivered vs.

These disputes held vs almost two yeeres, so as all men were afraid to ioyne with vs, and we to thereby left hopeleffe of any thing more, than that which our owne fortunes would veeld to adnance our proceedings, in which time fo many accidents hapned vnto vs at home and abroad, that wee were taine to give order by the Ships wee fent a fishing, for the retiring of Mailer Darmer and his people, vntill all things were cleered, and wee better provided of meanes to goe through with our defigne: But this worthy Gentleman confident of the good likely to enfue, and retolutely resoluing to pursue the ends he ay med at, could not be perswaded to looke backe, as yet; and forefuling to accep: our offer, began againe to profecute his Difcouery, wherein he was betrayed Demer bereatby certaine new Sauages, who solainly set upon him, giving him fourteene or fifteene wounds; edby Sauages. but by his valour and dexteritie of spirit hee freed himfelfe out of their hands, yet was constrai- See fio. his ned to retire into Virginia againe the second time, for the care of his wounds, where he fell sicke owne letterta 20 of the infirmities of that place, and thereof dyed : to ended this worthy Gentleman his dayes, af-me. ter he had remained in the discouery of that Coast two yeeres, giving ve good content in all hee vadertooke; and after hee had made the peace betweene vs and the Sauages, that io much abhorred our Nation for the wrongs done them by others, as you have heard : but the fruit of his lahour in that behalfe wee as yet receive to our great commoditie, who have a peaceable Plantation at this present among them, where our people both prosper and line in good liking, and assured - Plantation by neffe of their neighbours, that had beene formerly io much exasperated against vs, as will more at his meanes. large appeare hereafter.

But having passed all these storms abroad, and vindergone so many home-bred oppositions, and Patentrefreed our Parent, which wee were by order of State affigned to renew, for the amendment of newed. 30 some defects therein contained, wee were affured of this ground more boldly to proceed on than before; and therefore wee tooke first to consideration, how to raise the meanes to advance the Plantation. In the examination thereof, two wayes did first offer themselves : The one was the voluntary contribution of the Patentees; The other, by an easie ransoming of the freedomes of those that had a will to partake only of the present profits arising by the Trade and Fishing vpon the Coast. The first was to proceed from those Noble-men, and others that were Patentees, and they agreed by order among themselues to disburse a hundred pounds a piece, for the advancement of fuch necessary businesse as they had in hand. The second was to bee accomplished by setling such liberties and orders in the Westerne Cities and Townes, as might induce every reasonable man, in, and about them, affecting the publike good, or a regular proceeding in the businesse of Trade, to embrace an uniformitie, and to joyne a communitie or joynt flock together, &c.

BVt this Countrey, what by the generall and particular fituation is fo temperate, as it feemeth to hold the golden meane, and indeed is most agreeable to the nature of our owne, which is Climate. made manifelt by experience, the most infallible proofe of all affertions; infomuch as our people that are fetled, enioy their life and health much more happily then in other places; which can be imputed to no other cause, then to the temperature of the Climate. Now as the Clime is found to be so temperate, so delicate and healthfull, both by reason and experience; such is the soile alfo, some parts thereof yeelding wonderfull increase, both of Corne, the Natiues have most vie of ; as also of our owne, of all forts: with infinite varietie of nourishing Rootes, and other Hearbs and to Fruits common among them, but rare with vs. Befides, the Coast doth abound with most conue- Commodious nient Hauens and Harbors, full of fingular Ilands fit for Plantation; replenished with Plants and Coast. Wood of all forts; as Oake, Ceders, Spruce, Fir, Pyne, Walnut, Cheffnut, Elme, Saffatras, Plum-trees, and Calamus Aromaticus, &c. The people are tractable (if they be not abused) to commerce and Trade withall, and as yet have good respect of vs. The Seas are stored with all kindes of excellent Fish, and in many places upon the Coatt, fit to make Salt in. The Countrey aboundeth with divertitie of wilde Fowle, as Fowle.

Turkies, Partridges, Swans, Cranes, wild Geele of al forts, wild Ducks of chice forts, many Doues, especially when Strawberries are ripe.

There are feuerall forts of Deere in those parts, and some that bring forth two, three, and soure 60 young at once, which is a manifelt proofe of the fertilitie of the Soile, or temper of the Clime, or both together. There is also a certaine Beaft, that the Natives call a Moffe, hee is as hig bodied Deere as an Oxe, headed like a fallow Deere, with a broad Palme, which hee mues every yeere, as doth The Moffe a the Deere, and neck like a Red Deere, with a front Mane running downe along the Ranes of his defended. back, his haire long like an Elke, but esteemed to be better then that for Sadlers vse, he hath like-

Single of a Deere, and reacheth almost downe to his Huxens, his skinne maketh very good Buffe. and his field is excellent good food, which the Natives vie to Ierkin and keepe all the veerero forme their turne . and to proues very ferusceable for their vie. There have beene many of them Mount Manfell feene in a great Hand vpon the Coalt, called by our people Mount Manfell, whither the Sauases poe at certaine featons to hunt them; the manner whereof is by making of feuerall free, and fer-How they take ting the Countrey with people, to force them into the Sea, to which they are naturally addicted. and then there are others that attend them in their Boates with Bowes and weapons of fenerall kindes, wherewith they flay and take at their pleafure. And there is hope that this kind of to Beatle may be made feruiceable for ordinary labour, with Art and Industry.

Commodities.

The knowne Commodities of that Countrey are Fish of feuerall forts, rich Furres, as Beauers. Otters, Martins, blicke Fox, Sables, &c. There are likewife plentie of Vines, of three kinds, and those pleasant to the talte, yet some better then other. There is Hempe, Flax, Silkgraffe, feuerall veines of Ironitone, commodities to make Pitch, Rofen, Tarre; Deale-boords of all forts, Spirs, Masts, for Ships of all burdens; in a word, there comes no commoditie out of France, Germann, or the Sound but may be had there with realonable labour and industry.

Seutrall Plantations along the Coaft.

Further, wee have tetled at this prefent feuerall Plantations along the Coaft, and have granted Patents to many more that are in preparation to bee gone with all conveniencie. Those of cur people that are there have both health and plenty, fo as they acknowledge there is no want of an any thing, but of industrious people, to reape the commodities that are there to be had, and they are indeed to much affected to the place, as they are loth to bee drawne from thence, although they were directed to returne to give fatisfaction to those that fent them, but chose rather to performe that office by Letters, together with there excuse for breach of their duty in that behalfe. And thus you fee there is no labour well imployed, but hath his reward at one time or other. These incouragements have imboldned vs to proceed to the ingaging of our selves for the building of some Ships of good burden, and extraordinary mould, to lie vpon the Coast for the defence of Merchants and Fishermen that are in ployed there, as also to Waft the Fleets, as they got to and from their Markets : and wee purpose from henceforth to build our shipping there, where wee find all commodities fit for that feruice, together with the most opportune places that can 30 Laftly, finding that we have fo far forth prevailed, as to wind our felues into familiaritie with the Natiues (which are in no great number) along the Coast, for two hundred Leagues together, wee haue now dispatched some of our people of purpose, to dyue into the bowels of the Continent, there to fearch and finde cut what Port, or Place, is most convenient to fertle our mayne Plantation in , where wee meane to make the Residencie of our State and Gouernment, as alio to bee assured what other commodities may bee rayled for the publike, and private benefit of those that are dealers in that businesse, and willing to bee interessed in any the Lands there : Whither is gone this yeere already, for Trade and Fishing onely, thirtie Sale of the better fort of Ships be longing to the Westerne parts, besides those who are gone for trans-40 portation of the Planters, or supply of such as are already planted, whose returne (as is suppofed) will amount (at the least) to thirty thousand pound, the greater part whereof comes home in Bullion. And therefore as touching the third happinesse of these parts, which is the Sea, there needeth no other greater commendation, then this benefit of Fishing affured vnto vs by common Experience; although it affords many other hopes, both in regard of the facilitie of the Nauigation, the boldnesse of the Coast, the convenience of Roades, Havens and Harbors, for performance of all manner of impleyments ; yet is there also found Showes of Pearle , Ambergreece, great numbers of Whales, and other merchantable meanes to raise profit to the industrious Inhabitants or diligent Traders.

CHAP. II.

The Voyage of M. HENRY CHALLONS intended for the North Plantation of Virginia, 1606. taken by the may, and ill wfed by Spaniards: written by Iohn Stoneman Pilot.

N Tuesday the twelfth of August, 1606. M. Henry Challons Gentleman set forth from Plimonth, in our small Ship of the burthen of fiftie flue Tunnesor there. 60 about, called the Richard of Plimonth. Wherein went twentie nine Englishmen, and two of the fine Sauages (whole names were Mannido and Affacomont) which were brought into England the yeere before out of the North parts of Unginia, from our goodly River by him thrice discovered, called of 42, derees, 20, minutes were imployed for a farther discourry of these Coasts: And if any good occation were offered, to leave as many men as wee could spare in the Country. Being victualled for eleven or twelve moneths, at the charges of the Honourable Sir Iohn Popham Knight, Lord chiefe Inflice of England, Sir Fardinando Gorges Knight, Captaine of the Fort of Plimonth, torether with divers other worthipfull Knights, Gentlemen and Merchants of the West Countrye: John Stoneman of Plimonth being Pilot, who had beene in the forefaid parts of Virginia the yeere before with George Warmonib: The Maitets name was Niebolas Hine of Cockington, neere

The last day of August wee fell with the He of Madera, where we watered and refreshed our Madera. felues, and flayed three dayes, being very kindly vied by the Inhabitants. The third day of September wee departed from thence, pailing betweene Gomora and Palma, two of the Canary Iles, and from thence were driven by contrary winds, to take a more Southerly course then we intended, and to foent more then fixe weekes before wee could recover any of the Ant-Iles. The first that wee could recouer, was the Ile of Saint Lucia, in the Latitude of 14, degrees, 20. minutes, Saint Lucia, where we refreshed our selves with Wood and Water, And faw certaine of the Saugees there about fortie or fiftie, came vnto vs at our Ship in one of their Cannoas, bringing vnto vs Tobacco, Potatos, Plantins, and Caffans Bread, the which Sauages had flaine more then fortie of our Nati- Fortic Enelife on, the yeere before 1605, as after wee understood by Philip Glafco, and Miles Pett, being flaine by Sauan two of Captaine Nicholas, Saint Johns company, which was there treacherously slaine a-20 mong the reft.

Having flayed heare three dayes, about the two and twentieth of October we departed thence to the Northward. And in passing by the Ile of Dominica, wee chanced to see a white Flag put Dominica forth on the shoare, whereat maruelling, wee supposed that some Christians had sustained shipwrack their. And forthwith a Cannoa came off from the shoare towards vs., which when they came neere, being very little wind, we layed our Ship by the lee and flayed for them a little, and when they were come within a little diffance of the Ship, wee perceived in the Cannoa a Friar, who cried aloud in the Latine tong e, faying, I befeech, as you are Christians, for Christ his Friar Blofus fake to shew some mercy and compassion on mee, I am a Preacher of the Word of God, a Friar of his request, the Order of Franciscus in Smill, by name Friar Blasim. And that hee had beene there fixteene o moneths a Slave vinto those Savages; and that other two Friars which were of his company they had murthered and throwne into the Sea. We demanded of him then, how he got fo much fauour to preferre his life his Brethren being murthered : Hee answered, because hee did shew the Sauages how to fit them Sayles for their Cannoas, and to to eafe them of much labour often in rowing.

which greatly pleafed the Sauages as appeared, for wee faw them to vie fayles in their Cannoas. which hath not beene feene before. Then we demanded of him where they had this Linnen Cloth to make those Sayles : hee anfwered. That about two yeeres before that, three Gallions comming to the West Indies were cast away on the Ile of Gwadalopa, where abundance of Linnen Cloth and other Merchandife was caft lugar on shoare. We demanded farther, what was the cause of his being in this place, and how he came thither: he answered, That the King of Spaine did every yeere, fend out of every great Monastery certaine Friars into the remote parts of the Indies, both to fecke to conuert the Sauges . as also to feeke out what benefits or commodities might be had in those parts, and also of what force the Gansesof veet-Sausges were of, and what number of them were in the feuen Ant-Iles, viz. Saint Vincent Grana- ly fending of do, Saint Lucia, Mattalma, Dominica, Gwadalopa, Aifey. The which the faid Friat Blalem faid Frist out of he had diligently noted and observed, and did hope to make perfect relation of such great bene. Spaine. fits and riches as was to be drawne from thence, as he doubted not but would bee greatly accepted of his King, if hee might line to returne to declare it : For, faid hee, I have feene in one River discending from the Mountaines in the Ile of Dominica, the Sand to glitter like Gold or find Copper, whereupon I tooke some of it, and chewed it betweene my teeth, and found it perfect Mettall, the Sauages noting me, began to have fome realousie of me, so as I durst not take any farther nica.

go notice of it, neither would they fuffer him forward to come neere to that place. And farther hee faid, That if the great plentie of divers Fruits and Roots fit for mans fustenance were pertectly knowne, together with the Sugar-canes that they have in those Iles, and the fertilitie of the foyle he thought it would be very shorely inhabited; and as for the number of Sauages there, as neere as we could understand, was scarce one thousand of all forts of men, women, and children in all the faid feuen Hes.

Now, being moved with pitrie at the lamentable complaint, and humble fuit of this distressed Friar, wee tooke him into our Ship, and fent away the Sauages much discontented. And from thence wee fayled to the lie of Saint John De-port-rice, where on the nine and twentieth of Octo- They land the 60 ber, wee arrived on the Southfide, and forthwith fent the Friar on shoare, and delivered him to two Heardimen, which most thankfully received him, and of their courtesie brought vs a fat Cow. and proferred vs more with Hogs, Calues, or any thing elfe that they could procure vs in recompence of the good deed done to the Friar.

Wee departed from thence, and fayled out betweene the Iles of Saint Iohn De-portrico; and

Historia standing away to the Northward, And leaving the great shoulds called Abrion, on our Larboord fide, being in the Latitude of 21, and 22, degrees, from thence Westward, our course North North-west, and North-west and by North, vistil wee were in the Latitude of 27. degrees or better, and about one hundred and eightie leagues from Saint Iohn de Port Rice. In this place having had a very great florme of Wind and Raine continuing fiftie fixe houres and more before on the tenth day of Nouember, about ten of the clocke in the morning, fuddenly we found our felues in the middeft of a Fleet of eight Sayle of thips in a very thicke force of happy hapfall mift and raine, so as we could not see them before they were very neere, and within shot of them. among Spa- wherein three of them were on the wind-ward of vs, on a third and fourth more to lee-ward: those at the wind-ward came rome vnto vs, and shot at vs , requiring vs to speake with their IC Admirall. When we law that by no meanes we could avoid them, but that they would freake with vs. we put abroad our Colours, and went toward the Almirall, before wee came vnto him. he likewite throoke downe our Sayle, and came under his lee, demaning his pleafure: the other thip which first that vs, all our Sayles being downe, and that our mayne Sayle in pieces lying on the Decke. And forthwith the Admiral came on board of vs , with two and twentie men in their

But affoone as they were entred on boord of vs, they did most cruelly beate vs.all, and wounded two of our Company in the heads with their Swords, not sparing our Captayne nor any. Also they wounded Affacement, one of the Sauages aforesaid, most cruelly in feuerall places in the bodie, and thruft quite through the arme, the poore creature creeping voder a Cabbin for feare of their rigour : and as they thrust at him, wounding him, he cried still. King Iames, King Iames, King Iames his ship, King Iames his ship. Thus having beaten wall downe vnder the Deckes, prefently they beat vs vp againe, and thrust vs ouer-boord into their Boate, and so sent vs on boord of the Admirall ship. Neither would they suffer any of vs to speake a word, to shew the cause of our passing the Seas in these parts. Neyther regarded they any thing. our Commission which the Captayne held forth voto them in his hand : votill that the Admirall with the Company of foure other of the ships, had rifled spoyled, and delivered all the Merchandize and goods of the ship among them : which beeing done, they also divided vs beeing thirtie persons in all into the said five ships, by seven, six, sive, and soure to a ship.

King Tames his refpe aed by Spaniards.

> Three of the former eight Sayle made Sayle away, and neuer came neere vs, neither were partakers of our spoyle. Then they also repayred our Maine Sayle which was torne with the shot aforesaid, and put their men into her. And after because they could not make her to sayle well, they tooke two of our men, and put into her to helpe them, the other fine ships and our ship kept company two or three dayes together. After this they separated themselves either from other, not through any tempest or storme, but through wilfull negligence or simple Ignorance, by shaping contrary courfes the one from the other. So as not two of them kept company together. My selfe and fixe more of our company in the Vice-Admirall (of the burthen of one hundred and eightie tunnes; called the Peter of Siudi, the Captaynes name was Audress Barbear) being a 40 lone, and having loft the company of the Fleet, continued our courfe vntill the middle of December : at which time being about twentie leagues off from the He of Santa Maria, one of the Iles of the Azares, the Vice-Admiral and the whole company dilliving the great Ignorance of the Pilot, because he had told them ten dayes before that he was very neere the Hands, and had waited all this time, and could find any of them, entreated me very earneftly to flew my skill. And the Pilot himselse brought mee his Instruments , and besought mee most earnestly to affift him , and to appeare the company. Whereunto by there much importunitiel yeelded, And by Gods affistance on Christmasse Eeue, after our English account, I brought them safe to the Barre of Saint Lucas , being the first thip of the whole Fleet that arrived there.

French cout-

One of the ships of this Fleet, by the great Ignorance of the Spamsh Masters, Pilots, and Ma- 50 riners was driven beyond all the Coaft of Spaine, into Burdeaux in Gafcorne, In which shippe the Officersof the Admiraltie of France, finding foure of our Englishmen prisoners vader the Deckes in hold; to wit, Master Daniell Tucker, who was our Cape Merchant, Pierce Gliddon and two others , did very friendly set them at libertie ; and the said Daniel Tucker presently arrested the Spanish ship and goods beeing of great value, which of long time remayneth under arreft. The good Duke of Medina hearing of the arrivall of certaine English prisoners taken here, the Coast of the West Indies, ant command to the Captaynes of the Spanish ships, to bring four of the chiefest to be brought before him. Whereupon my felfe, Master Thomas Saint lohn, lohn Walrond our Steward, and William Stone our Carpenter were brought before him. The ship wherein 62 Mafter Challons was, was not yet come.

Master Danid Neull an Englishman dwelling in Saint Lucas , was appointed our Interpretor. And then the Duke required me vpon my oath to yeeld a true and faithfull answere, according to the whole state and manner of our Voyage and proceedings, which I did, according to the former Relation afore written, wherevpon his Excellencie seplyed vinto the Spanis Captaynes which had brought we laying, it this bee true which this Englishman affirmeth, you have recally wronged these men. And to commanded them to proude meate, drinke, and at ledging for vs, and to bring vs againe the next day before him. They fent vs nevertheleffe to Simil, where wee were throught to a Dutchmans house, called Signior Petro, where we were real onably lodged, and entertayned that night .

Thorsext morning being New yeeres day we were brought before the President of Simil, at Their impris the Contractation, who hearing of our comming, and not vouchfaling to fpeake with vs, fent forment, foure Officers to vs. and call vs into Priton. Where for the space of fine dayes wee had publike altowance, but fuch as poore men which were there Prifoners, also did of their mereie bestow on 10 vs:Atlength after many humble Sures; and earnest Petitions ex libited to the President, we had a Ruilbor Plate allowed to each man a day, which is fixe pence English, which by reason of the dearshot all fores of wiethall in those parts, will not goe fo far as three pence in England.

And foat feuerall times, within one moneth after eleuen more of our Company were commiteiden Prilon, as they came home, whereof our Captaine was one. Notwithstanding that the good Duke of Medica had discharged both him and all those of his Company, which came into Spains with him, and willed him to goe home to the Court of England, or to the Court of Spaine-where he thought to have best reliefe for his poore imprisoned Company. Whereupon Niebotas Hime our Matter, and two more of our men wifely forefeding what was like to bee the Hine, made haite away out of the Citie, and to got passage and escaped into England.

Before the comming of our Captaine to Similymy felte and eleven more of my Company were examined before the President of the Contractation : who finding no suft cause of offence in vs. did offen earneftly examine me of the manner and intuation of the Countrie of Virginia, together word the Commodities and benefit thereof. And after the comming of our Captaine, they likewite examined him to the fame purpole. We answered both to one purpole, according to our Committion in writing, which the Spaniards at our taking at Sea, had preferred and delivered vo unto the hands of the President. Within few dayes after, they gave our Captaine and Master Thomas, Saint John, libertie of mayne Prilon, upon the fecuritie of two English Merchants, which were Matter William Rapier, and Mafter John Peckeford, whereof the later is dwelling and maried in Startl. The rest of the Company being one and twentie in Prison, continued still in miserable 30 effure. An Jabout two moneths after, Robert Cooke of London one of our Company fell fick of a Floxe, whereof he languished three moneths and more, and by no meanes that wee could make could get him forth to bee cured, although wee frent more then fixtie Rials in Supplicaues and Sines to get him out. At length being dead, they cauled his bodie to bee drawne vp and downe the Priton by the heeles, naked, in most contemptible manner, crying. Behold the Lutheran, as fue of hers of our Company beeing then in Prifon beheld and fo laid him under the Conduit, and Cruell imme powred water into his dead bodie. This done, they cut off his Eares, Nofe and Members, as the nitie, Spaniar di themfelues confessed vinto vs, and so conneyed his bodie wee could never learne whether, although we profered them money to have his dead corps to burie it.

Shortly after Nathaniel Humfrie our Boatswaine was stabbed into the belly with a Knife by 40 a Spaniard, which was a flue in the Prifon, and fourteene dayes after dyed, who beging dead I went vnto the Keeper of the Prison, defiring to buy his dead bodie to burie it, and so for twenty Rials I bought his bodie, and buried it in the field. Then we befought the Prefident for Juffice on this flaue which had flaine our Boatfwaine: he demanded what we would have of the flaue. And we requested, that as he had flaine an honest and worthy man of ours causelesse, that hee mighe die for it according to the Law. The Prefident answered no, but if we would have him condemned for two or three yeares more to the Gallies he should. For find hee, The King of Spaine will Spaine Prefinot gime the life of the worst Slane that be bath, for the best Subject the King of England bath , and to dents respect fent vs away with this answere. Whereupon being out of all hope of Justice with the President, we repaired vnto the Regent being an Ecclesiasticall man, one of the chiefest ludges of the Citie, deiring likwife Iustice on the Murtherer aforefaid : who in kind tearmes promifed vs Iustice, niards, and so willed vs to retaine countell and Atturnies to profecute our Sute; which weedid accordingly, and foafter two moneths Sute, and the cost of more then two hundred Rials on Lawyers, Scribes and other Officers at length we had him hanged by the fanour of the Regent, which otherwife we had never obtained. And now I may not omit to flew how I got the libertie to have the fcope of the Citie for my Race to come, and go. Having beene three moneths in close Prifon with our poore company as aforeiaid. At length I got the fauour of two Englishmen inhabiting in Simil named Constantine

Collins, and Henry Roberts who did ingage themselves for me. The Spaniards were very defirous to have me to ferue their State, and proffered me great wages, which I refuted to doe, affirming. 60 that this imployment which I had in hand, was not yet ended untill which time I would not determine any.

Then the Alcadie maior of the Contractation House and divers others Merchants perswaded me to make them tome descriptions and Maps of the Coast and parts of Virginia, which I also refused to doe. They being discontent with me, fent mee againe to Prison, where I continued 000000 two and twentie dayes, and then I making meanes onto my good friends borrowed money, and fo gave divers bribes vnto the keepers of the Prison, whereupon they gave mee libertie to goe a. broad agains into the Citie at my pleasure. And wayting every day for some order from the Course of Spaine of our discharge, there came none but delayes and prolonging of our troubles and miferies. So as we began almost to despaire of libertie.

ss. 30 as we began amont to despatch the selling in Simil, named Hanfe Elosse, sent vitto mee to for ake with me, which when I came vato him, fignified vato me what he had learned of one of the Iudges of the Contractation: who told him as he reported vnto me, that the Spaniards had or the runges of the contract of the state o a great nate vinto me about an interest of those Sauages; and that they thought it was userer in Virginia, at the bringing into England of those Sauages; and that they thought it was is by my infligation to perferale our State to inhabit those parts. And because they had received to imall knowledge of those parts by my confession; and that they could not perswade mee to ferue that State, neither would make them any note draught, or descriptions of the Countrie. They resolved to bring to the Racke and torment me, whereby to draw some further knowledge by cont. fion from me, before any discharge might come for vs. The which this honest Merchant confidering, and the Innocencie of our case, gaue me to vnderstand. And wished mee rather to flie and preferre my felfe, then to fland to their mercie on the Racke, I hearing this the next morning, being the three and ewentieth of October, fuddenly fled from Simil, and with me Mafter Thomas Saint John aforelaid, and one other of our Company named James Stoneman my Broiter 1 10000 Saint 1000 atortians, and charges bestowed on the Keepers of the Prilon a little before I had got forth to bee cured of a Callenture. Thus wee fled from Simil, leaving Mafter Henry Challons our Captaine at libertie vpon fureties, and fixteene more of our Company in close Prilon. From thence on the fine and twentieth of October, wee came to a Mount in the Cundado, where finding no pallage by any thipping into England, France or Flanders. Wee travelled through Alemnie, to the Port of Seinnall, and finding no paffage there, wee travelled to Lastone in Portugall. Where were arrived the one and thirtieth of October, and there found flips reaste bound to goe to England, but the wind was contrary for fourteene dayes. At the time of our abode at L Bone, wee understood that three Carrickes were come from the East Indies: whereof one was arrived fately at Liftone tenne dayes before our comming this ther. Another was driven to leeward, and put in Vergo, as wee heard. The third Carracke 20 beeing at the Ile of Tercera, was to leake that they could not bring her home into Portugal, but valoaded her into three of the King of Spainer great Armadoes, to bring the goods more fately to Lilbone. Which Ships at there comming before the mouth of the River of Libone in the night within three dayes after my comming thither, were all cast away on cercaine shouldes there called Ofcachopos, or as wee commonly call them the Caschops, where of nine hundred men, as the Portagalli reported, but only thir: ie feuen were faued, and of the goods very little at all : because the said ships being cast away on the cbbe. The goods were driven off into the Sea, the dead bodies of many that were drowned, I my felfe faw call on the shore with the fundry wrackes of the parts of the Ships Mails and Yards, with other wracke of Caske, Chifts, and fuch like in great abundance.

The fourteenth day of November the winde being faire, wee tooke passige from Lisbone in a small Barke belonging to Bideford, called the Maget, and on the source and twentieth of the Same we were landed at Saint lues in Cornwall, and from thence I hasted to Plimmenib, where Ishewed vnto Sir Ferdinando Gorges and divers others the Adventurers, the whole Discourse of our vnhappie Voyage together with the mileries that wee had, and did indure vnder the Spania ards hands. And then halted with all the speed I could toward the Court of England, where I was affured to my great comfort; that they either were alreadie, or very facitly should bee

Before my departure from Simil, I should have remembred, that about Whitsonide last deliuered. there were brought into the Prilon of the Contractation there, two youngmen brought out of 50 the West Indies, in one of the Kings Gallions, which were of Captaine lobn Legats company of Plimmouth, which departed out of England, about the latter end of July 1606, bound for the River of Amazon; as hee told me before his going forth, where hee had beene two years before. And comming on the Coast of Brafillas thole young men (the name of one of them is here mowhen is illiam Adams horne in Plimpton neere Pl.mmonth) reported voto mee whether falling to the they had done leeward of the River of Amazons, or deceived by his Matter they knew not. And not being able to being home to being home to recour the faid River, were confit ayned to refresh in the West Index, in which time there mer inip, and fell a great diforder between the fail Captaine Legar and his company, to as one of his company, Spanish fulliting in a broyle within themselves aboard there ship, the the said Captaine Legar, whether in his owne private quarrell or with the confent of the relt of the Company, they could not tell mee. 62 But this is the more to bee suspected for that he alwayes in former Voyages dealt very straidy much com-mendedura mendedura After his death his company comming to the lle of Pmes, on the Southfide mendedor a company, Arter in a death his company comming to the lie of Pmet, on the Sudamer of Cabs, to retreft themselves, being eighteen perions were circumsented by the trechere of the Campany of Cabs. pert Sea min, the Spannards, and were there betrayed, and taken Priloners : and within foure dayes after, of eighteene persons, fourteene were hanged the other soure being youths were faued to serue the Spaniards, whereof, two of them, refuting to ferue longer in there ships, were put into the Prifon at Simil, the other two remayne still as il sues to the Spaniards.

This I had the rather noted to the end, that it may be the better confidered what numbers of thins and men have gone out of England, fince the conclution of peace betweene England and Spaine, in the way of honest Trade and Traffique, and how many of them have miferably misearried. Having beene flaine, drowned, hanged or pittifully captived, and thrust out of their ships and all their goods.

10 Reader, I had by me the Voyage of Captaine Thomas Hanham, (written by himfelfe) unto Saga-dahoc: also the written lownals of Master Raleigh Gilbert which stayed and fortified there in that unseasonable Winter (fit to freeze the heart of a Plantation) of Iames Davies, John Eliot, Gr. but our voluminousnesse makes me afraid of offending nicer and queasier stomackes: for which cause I bane omitted them , even after I had with great labour fitted them to the Preffe: as I bane also done a written large Tractate of Mawauthen, and the Voyage of Master Edward Harlie (one of the first Planters with Cap. Poplian) and Nicholas Hobson to those parts 1611. with diners Letters from Cap. Popliam and others. You must observe, that it was in those times called by the name of Virginia, and the Northerne Plantation or Colonie. But Captaine Smith (a man which bath fo many Irons in our fire) presented a Booke of the Countrie to Prince Charles his Highnesse, with a Map of the Countrey. 20 who filed it (as our hopes are, be will one day make it) New England, and altered the Sauge names of places to English. Hee made one Voyage thisber, Anno 1614, and the next yeere beganne another. which taken by Frenchmen, he was not able to make up: but in testimonie of bis love to bis Countres bere, and of his hopes there bath written divers Bookes. One called A Description of New Eng. land (in which his faid Doyages are described, with the description of the Country and many Arenments to incite men to that undertaking; which I had also prepared for the Presse, but for the former feares have omitted) the other called New Englands Trials twice or thrice printed, out of which I base added thus much, that the World may fee the benefit to bee made by fishing, and may also be better acquainted with the successe and succession of New Englands Affaires.

CHAP. III.

Extracts of a Booke of Captaine IOHN SMITH, printed 1622, called New Englands tryalls, and continuing the Storie thereof, with Motines to the businesse of fishing there.

The benefit of fishing, as Master Dee reporteth in his Brittish Menarchie.

E faith that it is more then foure and fortie yeeres agos, and it is more then for its yeeres ince he writin, that the Herrino Bother man of the the King of Spaine, were five hundred, befides one hundred Frenchmen , and three or foure hundred Savle of Flemmings.

The Coalts of Wales and Lancalbire was vied by three hundred Sayle of ftrangers. Ireland and Baltemore fraugted veerly three hundred Sayle of Spaniards, where King Edward the Sixt intended to have made a firong Caffle, because of the Strait, to have Tribute for fifning.

Blacke Rock was yearely filled by three or four hundred Sayle of Spaniards, Portugals, and 50 Bishiveri.

Muster Geneleman, and many Fisher-men and Fish-mongers, with whom I have conferred, report, The Hallanders raise yeerely by Herring, Cod, and Ling, 3000000, pounds.

English and French by Salt-fish, Poore John, Salmons, and Pilchards, 300000. pounds. Hambreugh and the Sound, for Sturgion, Lobilers and Eeles, 100000 pounds.

Cape Blanke for Tunny and Mullir, by the Biskiners and Spaniards, 30000 pounds. But divers other learned experienced Observers say, though it may seeme incredible, That the Duke one of two bun fred Tuns got thither in a moneth, and went full frame ht for Spane, the reft returned to Plimoth well fraught, and their men well, within five moneths, odde dayes.

From London went two more, one of two hundred Tuns, got thither in fixe weekes, and Proofe 6, 1616. within fixe weekes after, with fortie foure men and boyes was full fraught, and returned agains to into England within five moneths and a few dayes; the other went to the Canaries with dry fifth, which they fold at a great rate, for Rials of eight, and as I heard turned Pyrats.

I being at Plimoth prouided with three good Ships, yet but fifteene men to flav with me in the Proofe 7, 1617.

Countrey, was Wind-bound three moneths, as was many a hundred faile more, fo that the feafon being past, the Ships went for New found-land, whereby my defigne was frustrate, which was to me and my friends no small losse, in regard whereof here the Westerne Commissioners, in the behalfe of themselves and the rest of the Company, contracted with me by Articles indented vider our hands, to be Admirall of that Country during my life, and in the renewing of their Letters Patents fo to be nominated, halfe the fruites of our endeuours theirs, the reft our owne; being thus ingaged; now the bufinelle doth profper, fome of them would willingly forget mee; 20 but I am not the first they have deceived.

There was four good Ships prepared at Plimoth, but by reston of their difagreement, the fea- Proofe 8, 1618; fon to waited as onely two went forward, the one being of two hundred Tunnes, returned well fraught for Plimith, and her men in health, within five moneths; the other of eightie Tuns, went for Bilbow with dry fish, and made a good returne. In this voyage Edward Roweroft, alias Stallings, a valiant Souldier, that had beene with mee in Virginia, and feuen yeeres after went with mee from Plimoth towardes New England, with Thomas Darmer, an understanding and an industrious Gentleman to inhabite it; all whose names, with our proceedings, you may read at large in my description of New England, upon triall before the Judge of the Admiraltie, how when wee had past the worlt, for pure cowardise the Master and Sailer ran away with the Ship and all I had and 40 left mee alone among eight or nine Frenchmen of War . in the veere 1614. This Stallings went now againe in those Ships, and having some wrong offered him in New England by a Frenchman, he tooke him, and as he writ to mee, he went with her to Vremia with fifth, to trade with them for such commodities as they might spare ; hee knew both these Countries well, yet hee promiled mee the next Spring to meete mee in New England; but the Ship and he perished in

This yeere againe, divers Ships intending to goe from Plimoth, fo difagreed, as there went but Proofe 9, 1619; one of two hundred Tunnes, who flayed in the Countrey about fix weekes, with thirtie eight men and boyes, had her fraught, which thee fold at the first peny, for two thousand one hundred pounds, besides the Furs : so that every poore Sayler, that had but a single share, had his charges, and fixteene pound ten shillings, for his feuen moneths worke. M. Thomas Darmer, having lived about a yeere in New-found-land, returning to Plimath, went for New England in this Ship, and not onely confirmes what I have writ, but so much more approved of it, that he stayed there with five or fix men in a little Boat : finding two or three Frenchmen among the Sauges, who had loft their Ship, augmented his company, with whom hee ranged the Coalt to Virginia, where he was kindly welcommed and well refreshed; thence returned to New England againe, where hauing beene a yeere, in his backe returne to Virginia, he was so wounded by the Sauages, hee dyed vpon it, them escaped were relieved at Virginia. Let not men attribute their great adventures and vntimely deaths to vnfortunatenelle, but rather wonder how God did folong preferue them, with fo small meanes to doe so much, leaving the fruites of their labours, to bee an encouragement to 50 those our poore undertakings; and this for advantage as they writ unto mee, that God had laid this Countrey open for vs , and flaine the most part of the Inhabitants by cruell Wars and a mortall difease; for where I had feene one hundred or two hundred people, there is fearce ten to bee found. From Pembrocks Bay, to Harrintons Bay, there is not twentie; from thence to Cape Anne, some thirtie; from Taulbuts Bay to the River Charles, about fortie, and not any of them touched with any ticknesse, but one poore Frenchman that dyed.

For to make triall this yeere, there is gone fixe or feuen fayle from the West Countrey, onely Profeso, 1620 to fish, three of whom are returned, and as I was certainly informed, made to good a voyage, that euery Sayler for a fingle share had twentie pounds for his seuen moneths worke, which is more then in twentie months hee should have gotten, had he gone for wages any where. Now, though 60 all the former Ships have not made fuch good voyages, as they expected, by fending opinionated vnskilfull men, that had not experienced diligence to faue that they tooke, nor take that there was; which now patience and practife hath brought to a reasonable kinde of perfection : in defpite of all detractors and calumniations, the Country yet hath fatisfied all, the defect hath bin in their ving or abating it, not in it felfe nor mee.

hundred Villages, 20000.faile of Ships and Hoyes; thirtie fixe thousand are Fisher-men, whereof one hundred are Doggers, seuen hundred Pinkes and Wel-boates, seuen hundred Frand Boates. Britters and Tode-boats, with one thousand three hundred Busses, besides three hundred that veerely fish about Tarmonth, where they fell their Fish for Gold; and fifteene yeeres ago they had more then 116000. Sea-faring men.

The fishing thippes doe take yeerely two hundred thousand Last of fish, twelue barrels to 2 Last, which amounted to 3000000. pounds by the Fishermens price, that fourteene yeeres 220e did pay for their Tenths 300000. pound; which venting in Pumerland, Spruffia, Denmarke Lefland, Russia, Swetbland, Germany, Netberlands, England, or elie-where, &c. make their returnes in a yeere about 7000000, pounds; and yet in Holland they have neither matter to build ships. nor Merchandize to let them forth; yet by their industrie they as much increase, as other Nations decay. But leaving these vncertainties as they are, of this I am certaine :

That the Coast of England, Scotland, and Ireland, the North Sea, with Ireland and the Sound. New-foundaland, and Cape Blanke, doe ferue all Europe, as well the Land Townes as Ports, and all the Christian shipping, with these forts of Staple fish which is transported, from whence it is taken, many a thousand mile, viz. Herring, Salt-fish, Poore-John, Sturgion, Mullit, Tunny, Porgos, Cauiare, Buttargo.

Now feeing all these forts of fish, or the most part of them, may be had in a Land more fertile, temperate, and plentifull of all necessaries for the building of ships, Boates, and houses, and the nourithment of man; the Seasons are so proper, and the fishings so neere the habitations, we 20 may there make, that New England bath much advantage of the most of those parts, to serve all Emope far cheaper then they can, who at home haue neither Wood, Salt, nor Food, but at great rates; at Sea nothing but what they carrie in their ships, an hundred or two hundred leagues from

But New Englands fishings is neere land, where is helpe of Wood, Water, Fruites, Fowles, Corne, or other refreshings needfull; and the Terceras, Mederas, Canaries, Spaine, Portugal, Pronance, Sanoy, Sicula, and all Italy, as convenient Markets for our dry fish, greene fish, Sturgion, Mullit, Cauiare, and Buttargo, as Normay, Swetbland, Littuania, or Germany, for their Herring, which is here also in abundance for taking; they returning but Wood, Pitch, Tarre, Sope-affes, Cordage, Flaxe, Waxe, and fuch like Commodities: we, Wines, Oyles, Sugars, Silkes, and fuch Merchandize as the Straits affoord, whereby our profit may equalize theirs; betides the increase of shipping and Mariners. And for proofe hereof:

With two ships sent out at the charge of Captaine Marmaduke Roydon, Captaine George Langam, Master John Buley and W. Skelton, I went from the Downes the third of March, and arrived in New England the last of April, where I was to have stayed but with ten men to keepe posich fion of thote large Territories, Had the Whales proued, as curious information had affured mee and my Aduentures, (but these things failed.) So having but fortie fine men and boyes, we built seuen Boates, thartie leuen did fish; my felte with eight others ranging the Coast, I tookea plot of what I could fee, got acquaintance of the Inhabitants; 1100. Beuer skinnes, a hundred Martines, and as many Otters. Fortie thousand of dry fish wee fent for Spaine, with the Salt-fish, 40 traine Oyle and Furres, I returned for England the eighteenth of July, and arrived fafe with my Company the latter end of August. Thus in fixe moneths I made my Voyage out and home; and by the labour of flue and tortie, got neere the value of fifteene hundred pounds in those grole Commodities. This yeere also one went from Plimmouth, fet out by divers of the Ile of Wight, and the West Countrie, by the directions and instructions of Sir Ferdinando Gorge, Spent their victuals, and returned with nothing.

The Virginia Company vpon this fent foure good ships; and because I would not undertake it Proofe 2, 1615. The Virginia Company vpon this sent route good mips; and because I would the men that for them, having ingaged my felfe to them of the West, the Londoners entertained the men that came home with me. They fet sayle in Ianuary, and arrived there in March; they found fish enough vntill halfe Iune, fraughted a ship of three hundred tunnes, went for Spane, which was 50 taken by the Turker; one went to Virginia to relieue that Colonie, and two came for England with the greene fish, traine Oyle and Furres within fix moneths.

In Ianuary with two hundred pounds in each for aduenture, and fix Gentlemen well furnished, I went from London to the foure Ships was promifed, prepared for mee in the West Country, but I found no such matter; notwithstanding at the last, with a labyrinth of trouble I went from Plimeth, with a Ship of two hundred Tunnes, and one of fiftie : when the filhing was done onely with fifteene I was to flay in the Countrey; but ill weather breaking all my Malts, I was forced to returne to Plimoth, where rather then lofe all, reimbarking my felfe in a Barke of fixite Tuns, how I escaped the English Pyrats and the French, and was betrayed by foure Frenchmen of War, I refer you to the description of New England : but my Vice-Admirall, not withit anding the late- 63 neffe of the yeere, fetting forth with me in March, the Londoners in Ianuary, shee arrived in May, they in March, yet came home well fraught in August, and all her men well, within five moneths, odde dayes.

TPon these inducements, some few well disposed Gentlemen and Merchants of London and other places prouided two Ships, the one of one hundred and fixtie Tuns, the other of fenentie; they left the Coalt of England the three and twentieth of August, with about one hundred and twentie persons, but the next day the leffer Ship sprung a leake, that forced their returne to Thmouth, where discharging her and twentie Passengers, with the great Ship, and a hundred persons besides Sailers, they fet faile againe the fixth of September, and the ninth of Nouember fell with Cape lames; but being pettred nine weekes in this leaking vnwholfome Ship, lvine wet in their Cabbins, most of them grew very weake and weary of the Sea, then for want of experience ranging to and againe fixe weekes before they found a place they liked to dwell on, forced to lie on the bare ground without couerture in the extremitie of Winter, fortie of them dyed, te and fixtie were left in very weake estate at the Ships comming away, about the fifth of April sollowing, and arrived in England the fixth of May.

Immediately after her arrivall from London , they fent another of fiftie five Tuns to funniv them, with thirtiefeuen persons, they set saile in the beginning of July, but being croffed by Westerly winds, it was the end of August ere they could passe Plimouth, and arrived at New Plimouth in New England the eleventh of November , where they found all the reople they left in April, as is faid, lufty and in good health, except fix that dyed. Within a moneth they returned here for England, laded with Clapboord, Wainscot, and Walnut, with about three Hogsheads of Beauer skins, and some Saxefras, the thirteenth of December, and drawing neere our Coast, was taken by a Frenchman, fet out by the Marquis of Cera Gouernour of Ile Den, on the Coaft of 20 Porton, where they kept the Ship, imprisoned the Master and Companie, tooke from them to the value of about five hundred pounds; and after fourteene dayes fent them home with a poore supply of Victuall, their owne being denoured by the Mai quis and his hungry feruants; they arrived at London the fourteenth of Februarie, leaving all them they found and carried to New England, well and in health, with victuall and Corne sufficient till the next Haruest.

The Copie of a Letter fent by this Ship.

A Letter from New Plimoth.

Quine Cousin, at our arrivall at New Plimoth in New England, wee found all our Friends and 30 Planters in good health, though they were left sicke and weake with very small meanes, the Indians round about us peaceable and friendly, the Country very pleasant and temperate, yeelding naturally of it selfe great flore of fruits, as Vines of diners forts in great abundance; there is likewise Walnuts, Chefnuts, Small-nuts and Plums, with much varietie of Flowers, Roots, and Hearbs, no leffe pleasant then wholfome and profitable : no place bath more Goofe-berries, and Stram-berries, nor better; Timber of all forts you have in England, doth coner the Land, that affords Beafts of diners forts, and great flockes of Turkies, Quailes, Pircons and Parsridges: Many great Lakes abounding with Filb, Fowle, Beauers, and Otters. The Sea offoords vs as great vientie of all excellent forts of Sea-fift, as the Rivers and Iles daily varietie of wild Fowle of most vefull forts. Mynes we find to cur thinking, but neither the goodnesse nor qualitie wee know. Better Graine cannot be then the Indian Corne, if we will plant it upon as good ground 40 as a man need defire. Wee are all Free-holders, the rent day doth not trouble vs, and all those good bleflings we base, of which and what wee list in their feafons for taking. Our company are for most part very religious honest people; the Word of God sincerely taught us enery Sabbath : fo that I know not any thing a contented mind can here want. I defire your friendly care to fend my Wife and Children is mee, where I wish all the Friends I have in England, and fo I rest

Your louing Kinsman William Hilton.

From the West Countrey went ten or twelve Ships to Fish, which were all well fraughted; those that came first at Bilbow, made seuenteene pounds a single share, besiles Beauer, Otters, and Martinsskins; but some of the rest that came to the same Ports, that were already furnished, so glutted the Market, their price was abated, yet all returned fo well contented, they are a preparing to goe againe.

For this yearc

There is gone from the West of England one y to fish, thirtie five Ships, and about the last of April two more from London, the one of one hundred Tuns, the other of thirtie, with some fixtie Paffengers to supply the Plantation with all necessary proussions. Now though the Turke and French hath beene somewhat too busie, would all the Christian Princes but bee truly at vinite, as his Royall Maiesty our Soueraigne Lord and King delireth, feuentie saile of good Ships were surficient to fire, the most of his Coasts in the Lenant, and make such a guard in the Staits of Hele lespont, as would make the Great Turke himielfe more afraid in Constantinople, then the smallest Red Croste, crosses the Seas would be, either of any French, Piccaroun, or the Pyrates of Argere.

> An Abstract of Letters sent from the Colony in New England, July fixteene, 1622.

Since the newes of the Massacre in Virginia, though the Indians continue their monted friendlip Jet are wee more wary of them then before; for their bands have beene embrued in much English bloud, onely by too much confidence, but not by force.

Here I must intreat a little your favours to digresse. They did not kill the Enolish, became they were Christians, but for their weapons and commodities, that were rare nouelties ; but now they feare we may beat them out of their Dens, which Lionsand Tygers would not admit but by force. But must this be an argument for an Englishman, or discourage any either in Virginia or New Eng-Land? No : tor I have tried them both. For Virginia, I kept that Countrey, with thirtie eight, and had not to eate but what we had from the Sausees. When I had ten menable to one abroad. our Common-wealth was very firong ; with fuch a number I ranged that vnknowne Countrey 10 fourteene weekes; I had but eighteen to fibdue them all , with which great Army I stayed fixe weeks before their greatest Kings habitations, till they had gathered together all the power they could; and yet the Dutchmen fent at a needleffe excessive charge did helpe Pombatan how to betrav mee.

Of their numbers wee were vncertaine ; but those two honourable Gentlemen, Captaine George Percie, and Captaine Francis West, two of the Phittiplaces, and some other such noble Gentlemen and resolute spirts bore their shares with me, and now living in England, did see me take this murdering Opechankanough, now their Great King by the long lock on his head, with my Pi- Opechancanough this murdering Opechanicanough, now their Great King by the long lock on his nead, with my rifield at his breaft, I led him among his greatest forces, and before wee parced, made him fill our mids of his ormids of his or-Barke of twentie Tuns with Corne. When their owne wants was fuch, I have given them part a- mie as Aubai-20 gain in pitty, & others have bought it again to plant their fields. For wronging a Souldier but the fa wis by Pi. value of a peny, I have caused Powbatan send his own men to lames Town to receive their punish- fora. ment, at my inferetion. It is true in our greatest extremity they shot me, slue three of my men, and by the folly of them that fled tooke me prifoner; yet God made Pocabontas the Kings Daughter the meanes to deluge me : and thereby taught mee to know their treacheries to preferue the reft. I: was also my chance in fingle combate to take the King of Palpaheob prifoner, and by keeping him, forced his subjects to worke in Chaines, till I made all the Countrey pay contribution having little elte-whereon to liue.

Twice in this time I was their Prefident, & none can fay in all that time I had a man flain; but for keeping them in that feare I was much blamed both there and heere: yet I left fine hundred 20 behind mee that through their confidence in fixe monethes came most to confusion, as you may reade at large in the description of Virginia. When I went first to those desperate designes, it coff me many a forgotte pound to hire men to goe; and prograftination caused more runne away then went. But after the Ice was broken, came many braue Voluntaries : not withflanding fince I came from thence, the Honorable Company have beene humble Suters to his Maieffie to get Vagabonds and condemned men to goe thither; nay, to much fcorned was the name of Virgnia, fome did chuse to be hanged ere they would goe thither, and were : yet for all the worst of spite. detraction and discouragement, and this lamentable Massacre, there are more honest men now fixers to goe, then ever have been conftrained knaves; and it is not voknowne to most men of voderstanding, how happy many of those Callumners doe thinke themselves, that they might bee 40 admitted, and yet pay for their passage to goe now to Vaginia: and had I but meanes to transport as many as would goe, I might have choice of ten thouland that would gladly bee in any of those new places, which were to bafely contemned by vngratefull hafe minds.

To range this Countrie of New England, in like manner I had but eight, as is faid, and amone ft their bruite conditions I met many of their filly incounters, and without any hurt, God be thanked; when your Weil Countrie men were many of them wounded, and much tormented with the Saunges that affaulted their Ship, as they did fay themfelues, in the first yeare I was there 1614. and though Mafter Hunt then Mafter with me, did most basely in stealing some Sauages from that coaff to fell, when he was directed to have gone for Spaine, yet that place was fo remote from Capamuck, where Epenem should have fraughted them with Gold Ore, that his fault could 50 be no caute of their bad luccelle, however it is alledged for an excuse. I speake not this out of vain glory, as it may be some gleaners, or some was never there, may censure mee : but to let all men be affored by those examples, what those Sauages are that thus strangely doe murder and betray our Co intrie men. But to the purpole.

What is already writ of the healthfulness of the agre, the richnesse of the soyle, the goodnesse of the Woods the abundance of Fruits, Fish, and Fowle in their season, they still affirme that have beene there now neer two yeeres, and at one draught they have taken one thou fand Baffes, and in one night twelve hog fboads of Herring. They are building a strong Fort, they hope shortly to finish, in the interior they are well provided : their number is about a hundred persons, all in health, and well neere sixtie Acres of ground well planted with Corne, befides their Gardens well replenshed with vefull fruits; and if their Adventu-60 rers would but furnish them with neees faries for fishing, their wants would quickly bee supplied. To supply them this dixteenth of October, is going the Paragon, with fixtie seuen persons, and all this is done by prinate mens par(:s. And to conclude in their owne words, should they write of all plenties they bane found, they thinke they should not be beleened.

For the twentie fixe fuyle of Ships, the most I can yet understand is .M. Ambrole Iennens of London; and Master Abraham Jennens of Plimmoth Sent (their Abraham) a Ship of two hundred and twentie Tuns, and the Niehtingale of Porchmouth of a hundred : whose Fish at the first pente came to 21 50 pounds: in all they were fine and thirty faile: and wherein New found Land they shared fixe or fenen pounds for a common man, in New England they shared foureteene pounds; besides six Dutch and French Ships made wonderfull recurnes in Furres.

Thus you may see plainely the yearely successe from New England (by Utrginia) which hath bin fo cottly to this Kingdome, and fo deare to me, which either to fee penish or but bleede, pardon me though it pattionate me beyond the bounds of modesty, to have bin sufficiently able to forefee it, and had neither power nor meanes how to prevent it. By that acquaintance I have with them, I may call them my children, for they have bin my Wife, my Hawkes, my Hounds. 10 my Cards, my Dice, and in totall my best content, as indifferent to my heart as my left hand to my right : and not withstanding all those miracles of disasters have crossed both them and me vet were there not one Englishman remaining (as God be thanked there is some thousands) I would vet begin againe with as I mall meanes as I did at the first; not for that I have any secret encouragement from any I protest, more then lamentable experiences : for all their Discoueries I can yet heare of, are but Pigs of my owne Sowe; nor more strange to me then to heare one tell mee he hath gone from Billings gate and discouered Greenwich, Grauesend, Tilberry, Quinboron, Lee and Margit, which to those did neuer heare of them, though they dwell in England, might be made feeme some rare fecrets and great Countries vnknowne, except the Relation of Mafter Dirmer. But to returne : It is certaine, from Cannada and New England within these fixe yeares, hath 20 come neere 20000/Beuer Skins. Now had each of those Ships transported but some small quantitie of the most increasing Beails, Fowles, Fruites, Plants and Scedes, as I proiected by this time their increale might haue bin sufficient for a thousand men. But the desire of present gaine (in many) is so violent, and the endeuours of many undertakers so negligent, every one so regarding their private gaine, that it is hard to effect any publicke good, and impossible to bring them into a body, rule, or order, volesse both authority and money affist experiences. It is not a worke for every one to plant a Colony; but when a Houle is built, it is no hard matter to dwell in it. This requireth all the best parts of art, judgement, courage, honesty, constancy, diligence and experience to doe but neere well : your home-bred ingroffing projectors shall finde there a great difference betwixt faving and doing. But to conclude, the Fishing will goe forward if you plant 20 it or no; whereby a Colonie may be transported with no great charge, that in a short time might provide fuch fraughts to buy of vs there dwelling, as I would hope no Ship should goe or come empty from New England.

The charge of this is onely Salt, Nets, Hookes, Lines, Kniues, Irish Rugs, course Cloath, Beades, Glasse, and such like trash, onely for fishing and trade with the Sauages, beside our ownencessary prouisions, whose endeuouts will quickly defray all this charge: and the Sauages haueintreze ted me to inhabite where I will. Now all these Ships, till this last yeare, have bin fished within a fquare of two or three leagues, and not one of them all would aduenture any further, where questionlesse fiue hundred saile may have their fraught better then in Island, New found Land, or elsewhere, and be in their markets before the other can have their fish in their Ships, because New 40 Englands filhing begins with February, the other not till mid May : the progression hereof tends much to the advancement of Virginia and the Bermudas, whose emptie Ships may take in their fraught there, and would be a good friend in time of neede to the Inhabitants of New found Land, &c.

Ednesday the fixt of September, the Winde comming East North-east, a fine [mall gile, we loofed from Plumoth, having bin kindly entertained and currecully red by dioers friends there dwelling, and after many difficulties in boilterous flormes, at length by Gods providence vpon the ninth of Nouember following, by breake of the day we espeed Land, which we deemed to be Cape [ed. and to afterward it proued. Vpon the eleuenth of November, we came to an anchor in the Bay, which is a good harbonr and pleafant Bay, circled round, except in the entrance, which is about foure 63 miles ouer from land to land, compaffed about to the verie Sea with Oakes, Pines, Juniper, Saffafras, and other sweete Wood: it is a harbout wherein 1000, saile of Ships may safely ride, there weerelieued our felues with Wood and Water, and refreshed our people, while our Shallop was fitted to coast the Bay, to search for an habitation : there was the greatest store of Fowle that euer we faw.

And euerie day we faw Whales playing hard by vs, of which in that place, if weehad inftruments and meanes to take them, we might have made a verie rich returne, which to our great griefe we wanted. Our Master and his Mate, and others experienced in fishing, professed, wee might have made three or foure thousand pounds worth of Oyle; they preferred it before Green-Land Whale-fishing, and purpose the next winter to fish for Whale here : for Cod we affaied, but found none, there is good ftore no doubt in their featon. Neither got we anie fish all the time we lay there, but some few little ones on the shoare. We found great Mussles, and verie fat and full or Sea Pearle, but we could not eate them, for they made vs all ficke that did eate, as well failers as passengers; they caused to cast and scoure, but they were soone well againe. The Baie is to fo round and circling, that before we could come to anchor, we went round all the points of the Compaffe. We could not come neere the shoare by three quarters of an English mile, because of shallow water, which was a great prejudice to vs. for our people going on shoare were forced to Ill Landing. wade a Bow shoote or two in going aland, which caused manie to get colds and coughs, for it was manie times freezing cold weather.

This day before we came to harbour, observing some not well affected to unitie and concord, but gaue some appearance of faction, it was thought good there should be an association and agreement, that we should combine together in one bodie, and to submit to such government and Gouernours, as we should by common consent agree to make and choose, and set our hands to this that followes word for word.

N the name of God, Amen. We whose names are underwritten, the lovall Subjects of our dread Soueraigne Lord King James, by the grace of God of Great Britaine, France, and Ireland King, Defender of the Faith, &c. Hauing undertaken for the glorie of God, and advancement of the Christian faith, and honor of our King and Countrie, a Voiage to plant the first Colonie in the Northerne parts of Virginia, doe by these presents solemnely and matually in the presence of G O D and one of another, couenant and combine our felues together in a civil bodie politike. for our better ordering and preservation, and furtherance of the ends aforesaid; and by vertue hereof to enact, conflitute, and frame such sust and equal Lawes, Ordinances, acts, constitutions, offices from time to time, as shall be thought most meete and convenient for the generall 30 good of the Colonie: vnto which wee promife all due submission and obedience. In witnesse whereof we have here ynder suscribed our names. Cape God eleventh of November, in the yeare of the raigne of our Soueraigne Lord King I a M E s, of England, France and Ireland, 18, and of Scotland 54. Anno Domino 1 620.

The fame day fo foone as we could we fet ashoare fifteene or fixteene men, well armed, with fome to fetch Wood, for we had none left; as also to see what the Land was, and what Inhabitants they could meete with, they found it to be a small necke of Land : on this side where we lay is the Bay and the furthest side the Sea : the ground or earth, fand hils, much like the Downer in Holland, but much better : the crust of the earth a Spits depth, excellent blacke earth : all woodded with Oakes, Pines, Saffafras, Iuniper, Birch, Holly, Vines, fome Ash, Walnut; the 40 Wood for the most part open and without vnder-wood, fit either to goe or ride in : at night our prople returned, but found not anie person, nor habitation, and laded their Boate with Iuniper, which smelled verie sweete and strong, and of which wee burnt the most part of the Munday the thirteenth of November, we vnshipped our Shallop, and drew her on land, to mend and repaire her, having bin forced to cut her downe in bestowing her betwixt the decks; and the was much opened with the peoples lying in her, which kept vs long ther for it was fixteene or seuenteene daies before the Carpenter had finished her : our people went on shoare to refresh themselves, and our women to wash, as they had great neede : but whilest wee lay thus ftill, hoping our Shallop would be readie in five or fix daies at the furthest, but our Carpenter 50 made flow worke of it, fo that tome of our people impatient of delay, defired for our better furtherance to trauaile by Land into the Countrie, which was not without appearance of danger, not having the Shallop with them, nor meanes to carrie provision, but on their backes, to see whether it might be fit for vs to leate in or no, and the rather because as we failed into the Harbour, there feemed to be a River opening it felfe into the maine Land; the willingnesse of the persons was liked, but the thing it felfe, in regard of the danger was rather permitted then approved, and fo with cautions, directions, and inftructions, fixteene men were fet out with every man his Musket, Sword, and Corilet, under the conduct of Captaine Miles Standilb, unto whom was adioyned for counfell and aduife, William Bradford, Stephen Hopkins, and Edward Tilley.

Wednesday the fifteenth of November, they were fet a shoare, and when they had ordered 60 themselves in order of a single File, and marched about the space of a mile, by the Sea they espied fine or ix people, with a Dogge, comming towards them, who were Sauages, who when they Sight of Sar taw them, raninto the Woods and whittled the Dogge after them, &c. First, they supposed uages, them to be Maiter Iones, the Maiter and fome of his men, for they were a shoare, and knew of their comming: but after they knew them to be Indians they marched after them into the Woods, least other of the Indians should lye in Ambush : but when the Indians saw our men following them, they ran away with might and maine; and our men turned out of the Wood after them, for it was the way they intended to got, but they could not come neere them. They followed them that night about ten miles by the trace of their footings, & faw how they had come the fame way they went, and at a turning perceined how they rame up an hill, to fee whether they followed them. At length night came vpon them, and they were constrained to take vo their lodging, to they let forth three Sentinels, and the reft, some kindled a fire, and others fetched Wood & there held our Randeuous that night. In the morning to foone as we could fee the trace. we proceeded on our journie, and had the tracke vntill wee had compafied the head of a long creake, and there they tooke into another Wood, and we after them, supposing to finde some of their dwellings, but we marched thorow Boughes and Buthes, and vnder Hils and Vallies, which tore our verie Armour in peeces, and yet could meete with none of them, nor their houses, nor finde any fresh water, which we greatly defired, and stood in neede off, for we brought neither Beere nor Water with vs, and our victuals was onely Bisket and Holland Cheefe, and a little Bottell of Aquauite, fo as we were fore a thirft. About ten a clocke we came into a deene Valley, full of brush, wood-gaile, and long grasse, through which wee found little paths or tracts. and there we faw a Deere, and found Springs of fresh Water, of which we were hartily glad, and fat vs downe and drunke our first New England Water, with as much delight as ever we drunke When we had reireshed our selves, we directed our course full South, that wee might come to the shoare, which within a short while after we did, and there made a fire, that they in the Ship might fee where we were (as wee had direction) and to marched on towards this supposed Riger ; and as we went in another Valley, we found a fine cleere Pond of fresh water, being about a Musket shot broad, and twife as long: there grew also many small Vines, and Fowle and Deere haunted thereschere grew much Safafras: from thence we went on and found much plainground about fittle Acres, fit for the Plow, and some signes where the Indians had formerly planted, their Corne : after this, some thought it best for nearenesse of the River to goe downe and tranaile on the Sea lands, by which meanes some of our men were tired, and lagged behinde, so we Hayed and gathered them vp, and ftrucke into the Land againe; where we found a little path to certaine heapes of Sand, one whereof was couered with old Mats, and had a woodden thing like 20 a Morter whelmed on the top of it, and an earthen pot laid in a little hole at the end thereof; we musing what it might be, digged and found a Bowe, and as we thought, Arrowes, but they were rotten; We supposed there were many other things, but because we deemed them graues, we put in the Bow againe and made it vp as it was; and left the rest untouched, because we thought it would be odious vnto them to ransacke their Sepulchers. We went on further and found new stubble of which they had gotten Corne this yeare, and many Walnut trees full of Nuts, and great flore of Strawberries, and some Vines; passing thus a field or two, which were not great, we came to another, which had also bin new gotten, and there wee found where an house had beene, and foure or five old Plankes laied together; also we found a great Kettle, which Cornefound. had beene someShips kettle and brought out of Europe; there was also an heape of fand, made hke An the former, but it was newly done, wee might fee how they had padled it with their hands, which we digged up, and in it we found a little old Basket full of faire Indian Corne, and digged further, and found a fine great new Basket full of very faire Corne of this yeare, with some fixe and thirty goodly cares of Corne, some yellow, and some red, and others mixt with blew, which was a very goodly fight: the Basket was round, and narrow at the top, it held about three or foure bushels, which was as much as two of vs could lift up from the ground, and was very handfomely and cunningly made: But whilst we were busic about these things, we set our men Sentinell in a roundring, all but two or three which digged up the Corne. Wee were in suspence, what to doe with it, and the Kettle, and at length after much confultation, we concluded to take the Kettle, and as much of the Corne as wee could carry away with vo: and when our Shallop 50 came if we could finde any of the people, and came to parley with them , wee would give them the Kettle agains, and fatisfie them for their Corne.

So we tookeall the Eares, and put a good deale of the loofe Corne in the Kettle, for two men to bring away one Staffe; befides, they that could pur away into their Pockets filled the fame; the rest wee buried agains, for we were so laden with Armour that we could carry no more. Not farre from this place we found the remainder of an old Fort, or Palizado, which as we conceited had beene made by some Christians, this was also hard by that place which we thought had been a River, voto which we went and found it fo to be, diei ling it faire into two armes by an high banke, flanding right by the Cut or Mouth which come from the Sea, that which was next unto vs was the leffe, the other arme was more then twice as big, and not vnlike to bee an Harbour 60 for Ships; but whether it be a freih River, or onely an indraught of the Sea, wee had no time to discouer, for we had commandement to be out but two dayes. Here also we taw two Cancas, the They returned one on the one fide, the other on the other fide, we could not believe it wis a Curou, till we care neerest, fo we returned, leaung the further d flowery hereof to our S alley and amether night backe againe to the fresh water pond, and there we made our randenous that night, making a great fire, and a Baricado to windward of vs, and kept good watch with three Sentinels all night, every one standing when his turne came, while five or fixe inches of Match was burning. It proved a very rainie night. In the morning we tooke our Kettle and funke it in the Pond, and trimmed our Muskets, for few of them would goe off because of the wet, and so coasted the Wood againe to come home, in which we were shrewdly pulled, and lost our way; as we wandred we came to a tree, where a yong Spiris was bowed downe ouer a Bowe, and some Acornes Grewed Villerneath; Stephen Hopkins laid, it had beene to catch some Deere, to, as we were looking at it, William Bradjord being in the Redre, when he came looking allo vpon it, and as he went catch Deere, to about, it gaue a fodaine ierke up, and he was immediately caught by the legge: It was a very pretty deuise, made with a Roape of their owne making, and Isating a moose as artificially made, as any Roper in England can make, and as like ours as can be, which wee brought away with vs. In the end wee got out of the Wood, and were fallen about a mile too high about the creake. where we saw three Buckes, but we had rather have had one of them. We also did spring three couple of Partridges; and as we came along by the creake, we saw great flockes of wilde Geese and Duckes, but they were very fearefull of vs. So we marched fome while in the Woods, fome while on the Sands, and other while in the Water vp to the knees, till at length we came neere the Ship, and then we shot off our Peeces, and the long Boate came to fetch vs : Master lone, and Matter Carner being on the shoare, with many of our people, came to meete vs. And thus wee 30 came both weary and welcome home, and deliuered in our Corne into the flore, to be kept for feede, for we knew not how to come by any, and therefore was very glad, purposing to soone as we could meete with any of the Inhabitants of that place, to make them large fatistaction.

When our Shallop was fit indeede, before the was fully fitted, for there was two daies worke after bestowed on her, there was appointed some foure and twenty men of our owne, and armed. then to goe and make a more full discovery of the Rivers before mentioned. Master lones was defirous to goe with vs, and tooke such of his Saylers as he thought vsefull for vs, so as we were in all about foure and thirty men : we made Maiter lones our Leader, for we thought it best herein to geatifie his kindnesse and forwardnesses. When we were set forth, it proued rough weather and croffe windes, to as we were constrained, some in the Shallop, and others in the long Boates to to row to the neerest shoare the winde would suffer them to goe vnto, and then to wade out aboue the knees; the winde was fo ftrong as the Shallop could not keepe the water, but was torsed to harbour there that night, but we marched fix or feuen miles further, and appointed the Shallon to come to ve as foone as they could. It blowed and did fnow all that day and night. and froje withall; some of our people that are dead tooke the originall of their death here. The next day about eleuen a clocke our Shallop came to vs, and we shipped our selues, and the winder which when we came we found it not Nauigable for Ships, yet we thought itimight be a good harbour for Boates, for it flowes there twelve footat high water. We landed our men betweene

the two creekes, and marched some source or fine miles by the greater of them, and the Shallop so followed vs: at length night grew on, and our men were tired with marching vp and downe the steepe Hils, and deepe Vallies, which lay halfe a foote thicke with Snow : Master lones wearied with marching, was defirous we should take vp our lodging, though some of vs would have marched further, fo we made there our Randenous for that night, under a few Pine trees, and as it fell out we got three Geefe, and fix Duckes to our Supper, which we eate with Soldiers flomacks. for we had caten little all that day. We marched to the place where we had the Corne formerly. which place we called Corne-hill; & digged & found the reit, of which we were very glad: we alfo dieged in a place a little farther off, & found a bottle of Oyle, we went to another place which we had feen before & digged and found more Corn, viz. two or three Baskets full of Indian wheat. and a bag of Beans, with a good many of faire wheat-eares; whill flome of vswere digging up this, fome others found another heape of Corn, which they digged vp also, so as we had in all about ten

so Bushels, which will serue vs sufficiently for Seede. And sureit was Gods good providence that we found this corn, for elfe we knew not how we should have done, for we knew not how we should finde, or meete with any of the Indians, except it be to doe vs a mischiefe. Also we had never Front and in all likelihood feene a graine of it, if we had not made our first lourney; for the ground was now Snow. coursed with Snow, and to hard frofen, that we were faine with our Curtlaxes and thort Swords, to hew and carne the ground a foote deepe, and then wrest it vp with leavers, for we had forgot to bring other Tooles: whilit we were in this imploiment, foule weather being towards, M. lones was earnest to goe aboord, but fundry of vs defired to make further discovery, and to finde out the Indians habitations, to we fent home with him our weakest people, and some that were ficke, and 60 all the Corne, and eighteene of ve staied still, and lodged there that night, & defired that the Shallop might returne to vs next day, and bring vs some Mattockes and Spades with them.

When wee had marched fine or (ix miles into the Woods, and could find no fignes of any people, wee returned againe another way, and as we came into the plaine ground, wee found a place like a grane, but it was much bigger and longer then any wee had yet feen . It was also covered with boords, fo as wee mufed what it should be, and resolved to dig it vp; where we found, first a being good, we failed to the River we formerly discovered, which we named Cold Harbour, to Cold Harbour

Sepulchro opined.

Mar, and under that a faire Bow, and there another Mat, and under that a Board about there quarters long, finely carried and painted, with three, Tynes, or broches on the top, like a Crowne alto her weene the Mars we found Bowles, Trayes, Dah s, and fuch like Trinkets; at longth ween came to a faire new Mit, and under that two Bundles, the one bigger, the other leffe, we opened the greater and found in ita great quantitie of fine and perfect Red Powder, and in it the bones and skull of a man. The skull had fine yellow haire full on it, and to ue of the flesh ynconfumed there was bound up with a Knite, a Packneedle, and two or three old fron things. It was bound vp in a Saylers Canuas Calacke, and a payre of Cloth Breeches; the Red Powder was a kind as Embaulment, and veelded a firong but no offentine fmell; It was as fine as any Flower. We one ned the leffe bundle likewife, and found of the fame Powder in it, and the bones and head of a little, hilde, about the legger, and other parts of it was Bound firing and Bracelets of fine whise Beads: there was also by it a little Bow, about three quarters long, and some other odde knackes we brought fundry of the pretieft things away with vs, and coucted the Corps vp againe. After this, we die ged in fundry like places, but found no more Corne, nor any things elfe but graves Whileft we were thus ranging and learching, two of the Saylers, which were newly come on the shoare, by chance espied two houses, which had beene lately dwelt in , but the people were gone. They having their Peeces, and hearing no body, entred the houses, and tooke out some thing, and durit not flay but came again & told vs; to some seuen or eight of vs went with them.

and tound how wee had gone within a flight thot of them before. The houses were made with long young Sapling Treesbended, and both ends flucke into the ground ; they were made round, an

like voto an Arbour, and couered downe to the ground with thicke and well wrought Mats, and the doore was not over a yard high, made of a Mat to open : the Chimney was a wide open hole in the top, for which they had a Mat to couer it close when they pleased, one might stand and goe vor gar, in them; in the minit of them were foure little Tru iches knockt into the ground, and (mall-tickes lai) ouer, on which they hung their Pots, and what they had to teeth : round as bout the fire they lay on Mats, which are their Beds. The Houses were double matted, for as they were matted without, to were they within, with newer and fairer Mats. In the Houles wee found Woodden Bowles, Trayes and Dishes, Earthen Pots, Hand-baskets made of Crab-shells, wrought together ; also an English Payloor Bucket , it wanted a Baile, but it had two Iron Eares ; there was also Baskets or rundry fores, begger, and fome leller, finer, and fome courfer : fome were 30 curiously wrought with Blacke and White in prettie workes, and fundry other of their houshold fluff: wee found also two or three Deeres Heads, one whereof had been newly killed, for it was still fresh : there was also a company of Deeres Feete, stucke vp in the Houses, Harts Hornes, and Eagles Clawes, and fundry such like things there was : also two or three Baskets full of parched Acornes, pieces of Fish, and a piece of a broyled Herring. We found also a little Silke Graffe, and a little Tobacco Seed, with some other Seeds which weeknew not : without was fundry bundles of Flags, and Sedge, Bull-rulhes, and other stuffe to make Mats; there was thrust into an hollow Tree , two er three pieces of Venison, but wee thought it fitter for the Dogges then for vs: fome of the best things wee tooke away with vs, and left the houses standing still as they were: Much disputation fell out about the place where wee should abide; and a Company was chosen 40 to goe out voon a third Dilcouery (whileft some were imployed in this Dilcouery', it pleased God that Miltris White was brought a bed of a Sonne, which was called Peregrine.)

Wedneflay the fixt of December we fet out, being very cold and hard weather, we were a long while after wee lanched from the Ship, before wee could get cleere of a Sandy Point, which lay within leffe then a furlong of the same. In which time, two were very ficke, and Edward Tilley had like to have four ded with colds the Gunner was also sicke vnto Death (but hope of trucking made nim to goe) and fo remained all that day, and the next night ; at length weegot cleare of the Sandy Point, and got vp our Sayles, and within an houre or two wee got under the weather shoare, and then had smoother water and better sayling, but it was very cold, for the water froze on our clothes, and made them many times like coats of fron : wee fayled fixe or feuen leagues by 50 the shoare, but saw neither River nor Creeke, at length wee met with a tongue of Land, being flat off from the thoare, with a Sandy point, wee bore up to gaine the Point, and found there a faire Income or Rode, of a Bay, being a league ouer at the narrowest, and some two or three in length, but wee made right ouer to the Land before vs, and left the discourse of this Income till the next day : as wee drew neere to the shoare, wee espied some ten or twelue Indians, very buse about a blacke thing, what it was wee could not tell, till afterwards they law vs, and ran to and fro, as if they had beene carrying fomething away, wee landed a league or two from them, and had much adoe to put a shoare any where, it lay so full of flat Sands : when wee came to shoare, we made vs a Baricado, and got fire Wood, and fet out our Sentinells, and betooke vs to our lodging, such as it was; wee faw the smoake of the fire which the Sauages made that night, about 60 foure or five miles from vs : in the morning wee divided our Company, some eight in the Shallop, and the rest on the snoare went to discouer this place, but we found it onely to be a Bay, without fat, and fine or either River or Creeke comming into it. This place the most were minded wee should call, the fix paces long. Grampus Bay, because wee found many of them there : we followed the tract of the Indians bate feet a good way on the Sands, at length we faw here they ftrucke into the Woods by the fide of a Pond, as we went to view the place, one faid, he thought he faw an Indian-houle among the Trees, to went up to fee : and here we and the Shallop loft fight one of another till night . it being now about nine or ten a clocke; fo we lite on a path, but faw no house, and followed a great way into the Woods, at length we found where Corne had been fet, but not that yeere; anon we found a great burying place, one part whereof was incompaffed with a large Palizado. like a Church-yard, with young foires foure or fine yards long, let as close one by another as they could two or three foot in the ground; within it was full of Graves, fome bigger and fome leffer tome were also paled about, and others had like an Indian-house made over them, but not matted :

those Graves were more sumptuous then those at Corne-bill, yet we digged none of them vos only viewed them and went our way : without the Palizado were Graues also, but not so costly. We went ranging vp and downe till the Sunne began to draw low, and then we hafted out of the Woods, that we might come to our Shallop. By that time we had done, and our Shallop come to vs it was within night, and we fed vpon fuch victualls as we had, and betooke vs to our rest after we had fet out our watch. About midnight we heard a great and hideous cry, and our Sentinell called, Arme, Arme. So we bestirred our selves and shot off a couple of Muskets and noise ceased: we concluded, that it was a company of Wolues & Foxes for one told vs he had heard fuch a noise in New-found-land, About five a clocke in the morning we began to be thirring, vpon a fulden wee heard a great & strange cry which we knew to be the same voices, though they varied their notes; one of the company being abroad came running in and cried, They are men, Indians, Indians : and withall, their Arrowes came flying amongst vs. our men ran out with all speed to recouer their Armes. The cry of our enemies was dreadfull, especially, when our men ran out to recouer their Armes, their note was after this manner, Woalb woach ba ba bach woach; our men were no fooner come to their Armes, but the enemy was readie to affault them.

There was a luftie man, and no whit leffe valiant, who was thought to be their Captain, flood behind a Tree within halfe a Musket shot of vs, and there let his Arrowes flie at vs; hee stood three shots off a Musket, at length one tooke as he faid full ayme at him, after which he gave an extraordinarie cry and away they went all, wee followed them about a quarter of a mile, but wee lest fixe to keepe our Shallop, for wee were carefull of our businesse. Wee tooke

no vp eighteene of their Arrowes, which wee had fent to England by Mafter lones, fome whereof were headed with brasse, others with Harts horne, and others with Eagles clawes: many more no doubt were thot, for thefe wee found were almost covered with leaves : yet by the fpeciall providence of God, none of them either hit or hurt vs. On Munday we found a very good A good Har-Harbour for our shipping, we marched also into the Land, and found divers corne Fields and little bour. running Brookes, a place verie good for scituation, so we returned to our Ship againe with good newes to the rest of our people, which did much comfort their hearts.

This Harbour is a Bay greater then Cape Cod, compafied with a goodly Land, and in the Bay two fine Ilands vnin habited, wherein are nothing but Woods, Okes, Pines, Wal-nut, Beech Safifras. Vines and other Trees which we know not. This Bay is a most hopefull place, innumerable itore of Fowle, and excellent good, and cannot but be of Fish in their feasons : Skote. Cod. Turbor and Herring we have tasted of, abundance of Musles the greatest and best that ever we saw; Crabe and Lobsters, in their time infinite : It is in fashion like a Cikle or Fish-hooke.

The eighteenth we went along the Coast in the Woods, some seuen or eight mile, but faw not an Indian, nor an Indian house, onely we found where formerly had beene some Inhabitants, and where they had planted their Corne: wee found not any Naugable River but foure or five [mall running Brookes of very fresh water, that all run into the Sea. The Land for the crust of the earth is a foits depth, excellent blacke mould and fat in some places; two or three great Okes, but not very thicke, Pines, Walnuts, Beech, Ash, Birch, Hafell, Holley, Asp, Sasifras, in abundance, and Vines every where, Cherry-trees, Plum-trees, and many other which we know not; many kinds of Hearbs we found here in Winter, as Strawberry leaves innumerable, Sorrell, Yarow, Caruell, Brook-lime, Liver-wort, Water-creffes, great flore of Leeks and Onyons, and an excellent flrong kind of Flax and Hempe. Here is Sand, Gravell, and excellent Clay, no better in the World.excellent for Pots, and will wash like Sope, and great store of Stone, though somewhat soft, and the best water that euer we drunke, and the Brookes now begin to be full of Fish; that night many being weary with marching, we went abourd againe.

The nineteenth of December, after our landing and viewing of the places, so well as we could we came to a conclusion, by most voyces, to set on the Maine Land, on the first place, on an high ground, where there is a great deale of Land cleered, and hath beene planted with Corne three or foure yeeres agoe, and there is a very fweet Brook runs under the Hill fide, and many delicate 60 Springs of as good water as can be drunke, and where wee may harbour our Shallops and Boates exceeding well, and in this Brooke is much good Fish in their seasons. On the further side of the River allo much Corne ground cleered, in one Field is a great Hill, on which wee point to make a plat-forme, and plant our Ordnance, which will command all round about from thence we may fee into the Bay, and far into the Sea, and we may fee thence Cape Cod.

Saurday

Gram'us Bay. Th y tound Gramonies

Saturday the three and twentieth, so many of vsas could went on shore, selled and carried time ber, to prouide themselues stuffe for building. Munday the fine and twentieth, wee went on thoare, fome to fell timber, tome to fawe, tome to rive, and fome to carry, fo no man refled

all that day. Munday the fine and twentieth, being Christmasse day, we began to drinke water aboord. but at night the Master cauled vs to have some Beer, and so on boord we had divers times now & then fome Beere, but on hoare nane at all. Wee tooke notice how many Families they were, willing some Beere, out of mode of wives to joyne with some Family as they thought fit, that so wee might build fewer houses, which was done, and we reduced them to nineteene Familiei to greamight build rewer hours, which was a property person halfe a Pole in breadth, and three in length, id and fo Lots were cast where every man should lie, which was done, and staked out; we thought this proportion was large enough at the first, for Houses and Gardens to impale them round, confidering the weakenesseof our people, many of them growing ill with colds, for our former Difcourses in froit and itormes, and the wading at Cape Cod had brought much weaknesse amonest ws, which increased enery day more and more, and after was the cause of many of our deaths.

briday and Saturday wee fitted our felues for our labour, but our people on shoare were much troubled and difcouraged with rayne and wet that day, being very fromy and cold: wee faw great smoakes of fite made by the Indians, about fix or seuen miles from vs as wee co iectured.

Thursday the fourth of Ianuarie, Captaine Miles Standish, with foure or fine more, went to 20 fee if they could meete with any of the Sauages in that place where the fires was made, they went to some of their houses but not lately inhabited, yet could they not meet with any; as they came home, they shot at an Eagle and killed her, which was excellent meat; It was hardly to be

Tuesday the ninth of Ianury, was a reasonable faire day, and wee went to labour that day in the building of our Towne, in two rowes of houles for more fafetie : wee divided by lot the plot of ground whereon to build our Towner After the proportion formerly allotted, we agreed that euery man should build his owne house; thinking by that course men would make more hast then working in common: the common house, in which for the first we made our Rendeuous, being neere finished, wanting only covering, it being about twentie foor square, some should make mor- 20 ter, and some gather thatch, so that in soure daies halfe of it was thatched, frost and soule weather hindered vs much ; this time of the years feldome could we worke halfe the weeke.

On the twelfth day, John Goodman and Peter Browne at dinner time tooke their meat in their hands and would go walke and refresh themselves, to going a little off they find a Lake of water, and having a great Mashife bitch with them , and a Spannell ; by the water fide they founds great D. ere, the Dogs chafed him, and they followed fof ar as they loft themselues, and could not find the way backe, they wandred all that afternoone being wet, and at night did freeze and fnow, they were flenderly apparelled, and had no weapons but each one his Cicle, nor any victualls, they ranged up and downe and could finde none of the Sauages habitations. When it drew to night they were much perplexed, for they could find neither harbour nor meat, but in froft 40 and fnow, were forced to make the Earth their bed, and the Element their coucring, and another thing did very much terrifie them; they heard as they thought two Lions roaring exceedingly for a long time together, and a third, that they thought was very neere them : fo not knowing what to doe, they refolued to climbe up into a Tree as the faieft refuge, though that would proue an intollerable cold lodging. They flood at the Trees root, that when the Lions came they might take their opportunitie of climbing vp, the Bitch they were faine to hold by the necke, for thee would have beene gone to the Lion; but it pleased God so to dispose, that the wild Beasts came not : fo they walked vp and downe vnder the Tree all night, it was an extreame cold night; fo soone as it was light they trauelled againe, passing by many Lakes, and Brookes, and Woods, and in one place where the Sauages had burnt the space of fine miles in length, which is a fine Char- 50 pion Countrey and euen. In the afternoon it pleased God from an high Hill, they discourred the two lles in the Bay, and fo that night got to the Plantation, being ready to faint with trauell and wint of victualls, and almost tamished with cold, Iohn Goodman was faine to have his shooes cut off his feet they were so swelled with cold, and it was a long while after ere hee was able to goe. The house was fired occasionally by a sparke that flew into the thatch, which instantly burnt it all up, but the roofe thood and little hurt; the most losse was Master Carners and William Bradfords, who then lay ficke in bed, and if they had not rifen with good freed, had been blowne vp with powder: but through Gods mercy they had no harmer the houle was as full of beds as they could lie one by another, and their Muskets charged, but bleffed be God there was no harme done

Munday the fifteenth day, it rained much all day, that they on ship-boord could not goe on 60 finare, nor they on shoare doe any labour but were all wet, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, were Very faire Sun-shiny dates, as if it sad beene in April, and our people so many as were in health wrought chearefully. The ninteenth day wee refolued to make a Shed, to put our common protission in , of which some were already set on shoare, but at moone it rained that wee could not

works. This day in the evening, loba Goodman went abroad to vie his lame feet, that were pirtyfolivill with the cold hee had got, having a little Spannell with him, a little way from the Plantation, two great Wolues ran after the Dog, the Dog ran to him, and betwixt his legs for fuccour, Two great he had nothing in his hand, but tooke vp a sticke and threw at one of them and hit him, and they Wolues. presently ran both away, but came againe; he got a Paile boord in his hand, and they late both on their tailes, grinning at him a good while and went their way and left him.

Saturday the seventeenth day in the morning, we called a meeting for the establishing of Military Orders amongit our felues, and we chole Miles Standift our Captaine, and gave him authoritie of command in affayres.

Saturday the third of March, the wind was South, the morning mystie, but towards noone warme and faire weather : the Birds fang in the Woods most pleafantly ; at one of the clocke it thundred, which was the first we heard in that Countrey, it was strong and great claps, but short, Thunder. but after an houre it rayned very fadly till midnight, Wednesday the seventh of March, the wind was tull Fatt.cold.but faire.

Friday the fixteenth, there presented himselfe a Savage, which caused an Alarum, he very boldly came all alone and along the houses straight to the Randeuous, where we intercepted him, not Conserence fuffering him to goe in, as vndoubtedly he would out of his boldnesse hee faluted vs in Enelish, with Sausges, and had vs welcome, for he had learned fome broken English amongit the Englishmen that came to fish at Monhiggen, and knew by name the most of the Captaines, Commanders, and Masters,

20 that vivally come; he was a manfree in fpeech, fo farre as he could expresse his minde, and of a feemly carriage, we questioned him of many things, he was the first Sauage we could meet withall; hee faid he was not of those parts, but of Morastiggon, and one of the Sagameres or Lords thereof, had beene eight moneths in there parts, it lying hence a daies faile with a great wind, and fine daves by Land: he discoursed of the whole Countrey, and of enery Province, and of their Sagamores, and their number of men, and strength. The wind beginning to rife a little, wee cast a Horiemans Coat about him, for he was starke naked, only a leather about his wast, with a fringe about a span long, or little more; he had a Bow and two Arrowes, the one headed, and the other vnheaded; he was a tall straight man, the haire of his head blacke, long behind, only short before, none on his face at all; he a ked fome Beere, but we gave him Strong-water and Bisket, and But-20 ter, and Cheese, and Pudding, and a piece of a Mallerd; all which he liked wel, and had bin acquainted with fuch among it the English, he told vs the place where we now live, is called, Patazzet, and Patazzet that about foure yeeres agoe all the Inhabitants died of an extraordinary plague, and there is nei- People all dead ther man, wo man, not child remaining, as indeed we have round none, to as there is none to hinder of a plague, our possession, or to lay claime voto it. All the afternoone we spent in communication with him: we would gladly have been rid of him at night, but he was not willing to goe this night, then we thought to carry him on thip-boord, wher with hee was wel content and went into the Shallop. but the wind was high and water feant, that it could not returne backe. We lodged that night at Stenen Hopkins house, and watched him : the next day he went away back to the Mafaforts, from Mafaforts whence he laid he came, who are our next bordering neighbours; they are fixtle strong, as he faith.

40 The Nausteer are as neere South-east of them, and are a hundred strong, and those were they of Nausteen whom our people were encountered, as we before related. They are much incenfed and prouokell against the English, and about eight moneths agoe slew three Englishmen, and two more hardly escaped by flight to Monbiggon; they were Sir Ferdinando Gorge his men, as this Sauage told Vi, as he did likewife of the Huggery, that is, Fight, that our discouerers had with the Naufites, and of our Tooles they were taken out of the Woods, which we willed him should be brought againe, otherwise we would right our selves. These people are ill affected towards the English by reason of one Hunt, 2 Master of a Ship, who deceived the people, and got them under colour of trucking Hunts wicked with them, twentie out of this very place where we inhabite, and feuen men from the Noufites, neue, and carried them away and fold them for Slaues, like a wretched man (for twentie pound a man) that care not what mischiefe he doth for his profit. Saturday in the morning we difmilled the Sauage, and gaue him a Knife, a Bracelet, and a Ring; he promifed within a night or two to come again, & to bring with him some of the Massassy our neighbours, with fuch Beauers skins as they had to trucke with vs. Saturday and Sunday realonable taire dayes. On this day came againe the Saunge, and brought with him fine other tall proper men, they had euery man a Deeres skin on him, and the principall of them had a wild Cats skin, or tuen like on the one arme : they had most of them long holen up to their grownes, close made; and about their groynes to their wast another leather, they were altogether like the Iristroules; they are of complexion like our English Gipleys, no haire or very little on their faces, on their heads long haire to the shoulders, onely cut before ; some trusted up before with a feather, 60 broad wife,like a fan, another a Fox taile hanging out : thefe left (according to our charge ginen him before) their Bowes and Arrowes a quarter of a mile from our Towne, we gave them entertainment as we thought was fitting them. They did eate liberally of our English victuals, they made semblance vnto vs of friend hip and amitie; they sang and danced after this manner like Stuges de-Anticks ; they brought with him in a thing like a Bow-case (which the principall of them had firibed about his wait) a little of their Corne pounded to powder, which put to a little water they eate : he had a little Tobacco in a bag, but none of them drunke but when he lifted, fome of them had their faces painted blacke, from the forehead to the chin, foure or five fingers broad : othere after other failions, as they liked : they brought three or foure Skins, but wee would not trucke with them all that day, but wished them to bring more, and we would trucke for all, which they promifed within a night or two, and would leave these behind them, though wee were not willing they should, and they brought all our Tooles againe which were taken in the Woods, in our mens absence, so because of the day we dismitted them so soone as we could. But Samoset our first acquaintance, either was ficke, or fained himfelfe fo, and would not goe with them, and staied with vs till Wednesday morning: Then we sent him to them, to know the reason they came not according to their words, and we gaue him an Hat, a paire of Stockings and Shooes, a Shirt. and a piece of Cloth to tye about his wall.

Thursday the 22. of March, was a very faire warme day. About noone we met againe about our publike bufineffe, but we had scarce beene an houre together, but Samofer came againe, and Squante, the onely Natine of Patrixat, where wee now inhabite, who was one of the twentie Captives that by Hant were carried away, and had beene in England, and dwelt in Cornbill with Master lohn Slanie a Merchant, and could speake a little English, with three others, and they brought them some few Skins to trucke, and some Red Herrings newly raken and dried, but not falted and fignified voto vs, that there Great Sagamore Maffafort was hard by, with Duadegnina his brother, and all their men. They could not well expr. He in English what they would, but after an houre the King came to the top of an Hill over against vs, and had in his trayne sixtie men. that we could well behold them, and they vs: wee were not willing to fend our Gouernour to them, and they vawilling to come to vs, fo Squanto went againe vnto him, who brought word that wee should fend one to parley with him, which we did, which was Edward Winfloe, to know his minit, and to fignifie the mind and will of our Gouernor, which was to have trading and peace with him. Wee tent to the King a paire of Kniues, and a Copper Chaine, with a Iewell at it. To Quadequina we fent likewife a Knife and a lewell to hang in his care, and withall a Pot of ftrong water, a good quantitie of Bisket, and fome Butter, which were all willingly accepted : our Meifenger made a speech vnto him, that King I A M E s faluted him with words of Loue and Peace, and did accept of him as his Friend and Alley, and that our Gouernour defired to fee him and to trocke with him, and to confirme a Peace with him, as his next neighbour; hee liked well of the speech, and heard it attentively, though the Interpreters did not well expresse it; after hee had caten and drunk himfelfe, & given the rest to his company, he looked upon our Maffengers Sword and Armor which he had on, with intimation of his defire to buy it, but on the other fide, our Meffenger shewed his vnwillingnesse to part with it: In the end he left him in the custodie of Quadequina his brother, and came ouer the Brook and some twenty men following him, leaving all their Bowes and Arrowes behind them. We kept fix or feuen as Holtages for our Mellenger; Cap. Standilh and M. William fon met the King at the Brook, with halfe a dozen Musketiers, they faluted him and he them, to one going ouer, the one on the one fide, and the other on the other, conducted him to an house then in building, where wee placed a greene Rug, and three or foure Culhi- 40 ons. Then instantly came our Gouernour, with a Drum and Trumpet after him, and some few Musketiers. After falutations, our Gouernour kiffing his hand, the King kiffed him, and fo they fare downe. The Gouernour called for some strong water, and drunke to him, and he drunke a great draught that made him iweate all the while after; hee called for a little fresh meate, which the King did eate willingly, and did give his followers. Then they treated of Peace, which was; First, That neither he nor any of his should injure or do hurt to any of our people. Secondly, & if means of peace any of his did hurt to any of ours, he should fend the offender, that we might punish him. Thirdly, that if any of our tooles were taken away when our people were at work, he thould cause them to bee reflored, and if ours did any harme to any of his, we would doe the like to them. Fourthly, If any did uniuftly war against him we would aide him; If any did war against vs, he should aide vs. 40 Fifthly, He should fend to his neighbor Confederates, to certifie them of this, that they might not wrong vs, but might be likewife comprised in the conditions of Peace. Sixthly, That when their men came to vs, they should leave their Bowes and Arrowes behind them, as wee should doe our Peeces when we came to them. Lattly, that doing thus King I A M E s would effeeme of him as his Friend and Ally: all which the King feemed to like well, and it was applauled of his followers, all the while he fate by the Gouernour hee trembled for feare. In his perion hee is a very lufty man, in his best yeeres, anable body, grave of countenance, and space of speech : In his attyre little or nothing differing from the rest of his followers , onely in a great Chaine of white bone Beades about his neck, & at it behind his neck hangs a little bag of Tebicco, which he drank and gaue vs to drinke; his face was painted with a fad Red like Murry, and evied both head and to face, that hee looked greafily : All his followers likewife, were in their faces in part or in whole painted, fome Blacke, fome Red, fome Yellow, and fome White, fome with Croffes, and other Antick workes, some had Skins on them, and some naked, all strong, tall men in appearance. The King had his bosome hanging in a string, a great long Knife; he maruelled much at our Trumper, and some of his men would found it as well as they could, Samofet and Squauto, stayed all night with vs. and the King and all his men lay all night in the Wood, not about halfe an Englife mile from vs. and all their wives and women with them, they faid, that within eight or nine daies. they would come and fet Corne on the other fide of the Brooke, and dwell there all Summer. which is hard by vs. That night wee kept good watch, but there was no appearance of danger; the next morning divers of our people came over to vs, hoping to get fome victualls as wee imagined, some of them told vs the King would have some of vs come fee him : Captaine Standilb. and Ifage Alderson went venteroully, who were welcommed of him after their manner; he gave them three or foure ground Nuts, and some Tobacco. Wee cannot yet conceine, but that hee is to willing to have peace with vs, for they have seene our people sometimes alone two or three in the Woods at worke and Fowling, when as they offered them no harme, as they might eafily have done, and especially because hee hath a potent Aduersarie, the Narowhiganseis, that are at warre with him, against whom hee thinkes wee may bee some strength to him, for our Peeces are terrible vnto them. This morning they stated till ten or eleven of the clocke, and our Governour bid them fend the Kings Kettle, and filled it full of Peafe, which pleafed them well, and to they

Friday was a very faire day, Samofet and Squanto stil remained with ve. Squanto went at noon to fifth for Eeles, at night he came home with as many as hee could well lift in one hand, which our people were glad of, they were fat and fweete, hee trod them out with his feete, and fo caught 20 them with his hands without any other Inftrument, This day we proceeded on with our common businesse, from which we had bin so often hindred by the Sauages comming, and concluded both of Militarie Orders, and of fome Lawes and Orders as we thought behoouefull for our prefent estate, and condition, and likewise chuse our Governour for this yeere, which was Master Iobn Carver, a man well approued amongst vs.

T feemed good to the Company for many confiderations, to fend some among it them to Mas- A journey to Saloyt, the greatest Commander among it the Sauages, bordering about vs ; partly to know Pachamokit, the where to find them, if occasion ferued, as also to see their strength, discouer the Countrey, preuent abuses in their diforderly comming vnto vs, make satisfaction for some conceiued iniuries Massages. 30 to be done on our parts, and to continue the league of Peace and Friendship betweene them and

vs. For thefe, and the like ends, it pleased the Gouernour to make choice of Steven Hopkins, and Edward Winfloe to goe vnto him, and having a fit opportunitie, by reason of a Sauage, called Tifquantum (that could fpeake English) comming vnto vs : with all expedition prouided a Horsemans Coat, of Red Cotton, and laced with a flight Lace for a Prefent, that both they and their melfage might bee the more acceptable amongs them.

Wee fet forward the tenth of fune, about nine a clock in the morning, our guide refoluing that night to reft at Namafebet, a Towne vnder Maffafoyt, and conceiued by vs to be very neere, because the Inhabitants flocked so thicke vpon enery slight occasion amongst vs : but wee found it to bee some fitteene English miles. On the way wee found some ten or twelue men, women, and o children, which had pettered vs. till wee were wearie of them, perceiving that (as the manner of them all is) where victuall is easiliest to be got, there they line, especially in the Summer: by reaion whereof, our Bay affording many Lobiters , they refort every Spring Tide thither : and now returned with vs to Namafchet. Thither we came about three a clocke after noone, the Inhabitants entertaining vs with ioy, in the best manner they could, giving vs a kind of bread, called by them Maizium, and the spawne of Shads, which then they got in abundance, in so much as they gaue vs spoones to eate them, with thefe they boyled mustie Acornes, but of the Shads wee eate heartily. After this they defired one of our men to shoot at a Crow, complaining what damage they fultained in their Corne by them, who shooting some fourescore off and killing, they much admired it, as other shots on other occasions. After this Tifquanium told vs wee should so hardly in one day reach Pakanokick, mouing vs to go some eight miles further, where we should find more store and better victuals then there: Being willing to hasten our journey we went, and came thither at Sunne fetting, where we found many of the Namafebeucks (they fo calling the men of Nama schet) fishing vpon a Ware which they had made on a Ruer which belonged to them, where they caught abundance of Baffe. Thefe welcommed vs allo, gaue vs of their fifth, and we them of our victualls, not doubting but we should have enough where ere we came. There we lodged in the open fields : for houses they had none, though they spent the most of the Summer there. The head of this River is reported to bee not farre from the place of our abode, vpon it are, and have beene many Townes, it being a good length. The ground is very good on both fides, it being for the most part cleered: Thousands of men have lived there, which died in a great plague Great plague.

60 not long fince : and pittie it was and is to fee, fo many goodly fields, and fo well feated, without men to dreffe and manure the fame. Vpon this River dwelleth Maffafoyt.

The next morning wee brake our fait, tooke our leave and departed, being then accompanied with fome fixe Sauages, bauing gone about fixe miles by the River fide, at a knowne shoale place. it being low water, they spake to vs to put off our breeches, for wee must wade thorow. Here for there were remaining aliue onely two men, both aged, especially the one being about three-score: Thele two espying a company of men entring the River, ran very swiftly and low in the graffe to meet vs at the Banke, where with shell voyces and great courage, standing charged vp-

on vs with their Bowes, they demanded what wee were, supposing vs to be enemies, and thinkine to take adurantage on vs in the water : but feeing wee were friends, they welcommed vs with fuch food as they had, and we bestowed a small bracelet of Beads on them. Thus farre we are sure

Maffafort being both grieued and athamed, that he could not better entertaine vs; and retaining Tilguantum to lend from place to place to procure trucke for vs ; and appointing another, called Tokam thamon in his place, whom we had tound faithfull before and after upon all occasions.

the Tile et bes and flowes. Having here againe refreshed our selves we proceeded in our Iourney, the weather being verie hot for travell, yet the Countrey fo well watered, that a man could scarce be drie, but hee should to have a Spring at hand to cloole his thirst, beside small Rivers in abundance : But the Sauages will not willingly drinke, but at a Spring head. When we came to any small Brooke, where no Bridge was , two of them defired to carry vs through of their owne accords, also fearing wee were or would bee wearie, offered to carrie our Peeces, also if wee would lay off any of our clothes, wee should have them carried: and as the one of them had found more speciall kindnesse from one of the Meffengers, and the other Sauage from the other; fo they shewed their thankfulnesse accordingly in affording vsall helpe, and furtherance in the Journey. As we passed along, we observed that there were few places by the River, but had been inhabited, by reason whereof much ground was cleere, saue of weeds which grew higher then our heads. There is much good Timber, both Oake, Walnut-tree, Firre, Beech, and exceeding great

After we came to a Towne of Maffaforts, where we eat Oyfters and other Fish. From thence we went to Packanobick, but Maffafoys was not at home, there we flaired, he being fent for : when newes was brought of his comming, our guide Tifquantum requested that at our meeting, wee would discharge our Peeces, but one of vs going about to charge his Peece, the women and children through feare to fee them take up his Peece, ran away, and could not be pacified, till he laid it downe againe, who afterward were better informed by our Interpreter. Maffafoyt being come, wee discharged our Peeces, and saluted him, who after their manner kindly welcommed vs, and tooke vs into his house, and set vs downe by him, where having delivered our Message and Prefents, and having put the Coat on his backe, and the Chaine about his necke, hee was not a little 30 proud to behold himselte, and his men also to see their King so brauely attired. For answere to our Meffage, he told vs we were welcome, and he would gladly continue that Prace and Friendthip which was betweene him and vs : and for his men they should no more petter vs as they had done : Allo, that hee would fend to Paomet, and would helpe vs with Corne for Seed, according to our request.

This being done, his men gathered neere vnto him, to whom hee turned himfelfe, and mades great Specch; they sometime interposing, and as it were, confirming and applauding him in that he faid. The meaning whereof was (as faire as wee could learne) thus; Was not hee Maffafort Commander of the Countrey about them ! Was not fuch a Towne his and the people of it! and should they not bring their skins vnto vs. After this manner, he named at least thirrie places, and 40 their answere was as aforesaid to every one : so that as it was delightfull, it was tedious vnto vs. This being ended, he lighted Tobacco for vs, and fell to discoursing of England, and of the Kings Maiestie, maruelling that hee would live without a Wife. Also hee talked of the Frenchmen, bidding vs not to suffer them to come to Narohiganfet, for it was King I A M E s his Countrey, and healfo was King I A M E s his man. Late it grew, but victualls he offered none; for indeed he had not any, being he came so newly home. So we defired to goe to rest : hee laid vs on the bed with himfelfe and his wife, they at the one end and wee at the other, it being onely plankes laid a foot from the ground, and a thinne Mat vpon them. Two more of his chiefe men for want of roome preded by and vpon vs ; fo that wee were worfe wearie of our lodging then The next day being Thursday, many of their Sachmis, or pettie Gouernours came to fee vs, and many of their men alio. There they went to their manner of Games for Skins and Knices, There we challenged them to shoot with them for Skins : but they durit not : onely they defired to see one of vs shoot at a marke, who shooting with Haile-shor, they wondred to see the marke fo full of holes. About one a clocke, Maffafort brought two Fifthes that he had thot, they were like Breame, but three times so bigge, and better meat. These being boyledathere were at least fortie looked for share in them, the most cate of them: This meale onely we had in two nights Hungtisfare. and a day, and had not one of vs bought a Partridge, we had taken our Journey failing: Very inportunate hee was to have vs flay with them longer : But wee defired to keepe the Sabbathat home, and feared wee should either bee light-headed for want of sleepe, for what with bad lod- 60 ging, the Sauages barbarous finging (for they yie to fing themselves askepe) Lice and Fleas within doores, and Muskeetoes without, wee could hardly fleepe all the time of our being there; we much fearing that if we should stay any longer, we should not be able to recour home for want of ftrength. So that on the Friday morning before Sun-riling, wee teoke our kaue and departed,

He elementh of June we fer forth toward Namet, the weather being very faire: but ere we A Voyage had bin long at Sea, there arofe a fforme of winde and raine, with much lightning and thun- made by ten of der, in so much that a spout arose not farre from vs : but God be praised, it dured not long, and our men othe we put in that night for Harbour at a place called Cummagnid, where we had some hope to finde News to feek the Boy. Two Sugges were in the Boat with vs, the one was Tifquantum our Interpreter, the oa Boy thathad to other Tolamabamon, a speciall friend. It being night before we came in, wee Anchored in the loft himselfe middeft of the Bay, where we were dry at a low water. In the morning we effied Sauages feek- in the Woods; middelt of the Bry, where we were dry at a low water. In the morning we explice Sanages teck with fuch acciing Lobsters, and fent our two Interpreters to speake with them, the channell being betweene dents as befell them; where they told them what we were, and for what we werecome, willing them not at vs in that all to feare vs, for we would not hurt them. Their answere was, that the Boy was well, but he Voyage, was at Naulet; yet fince wee were there they defired vs to come ashoare and eate with them : which as foone as our Boate floated we did : and went fixe alhoare, having foure pledges for them in the Boate. They brought vs to their Sachim or Gouernour, whom they call Iganough, a man not exceeding twenty fix yeares of age, but very personable, gentle courteous, and faire conditioned, indeede not like a Sauage, faue for his attyre : his entertainment was answerable to his parts. and his cheare plentifull and various.

One thing was very grieuous vnto vs at this place. There was an old Woman, whom wee judged to be no leffe then an hundred yeares old, which came to fee vs because shee neuer saw English, yet could not behold vs without breaking forth into great passion, weeping and crying exceffigely. We demanding the reason of it, they cold vs, she had three Sonnes, who when Maffer Hunt was in these parts, went abourd his Ship to trade with him, and he carried them Captines into Spaine (for Tifquantum at that time was carried away alfo) by which meanes thee was deprived of the comfort of her children in her old age. We told them were forry that any Englishman (hould give them that offence, that Hunt was a bad man, and that all the English that heard of it condemned him for the fame : but for vs, we would not offer them any fuch iniury, 30 though it would gaine vs all the Skins in the Countrie. So we gave her some small trifles, which fomewhat appealed her.

After dinner we tooke Boate for Nauset, Iyanough and two of his men accompanying vs. Ere we came to Nanfee, the day and tide were almost spent, in so much as we could not goe in with our Shallon; but the Sachim or Gouernour of Cammagnid went alhoare and his men with him, we allo fent Tifquantum to tell Afpinet the Sachim of Naufet, wherefore we came. After Sunfet Aspinet came with a great traine, and brought the Boy with him, one bearing him through the water : he had not leffe then an hundred with him, the halfe whereof came to the Shallop fide ynarmed with him, the other stood aloofe with their Bowe and Arrowes. There he delivered vs the Boy, behing with Beades, and made peace with vs. wee beftowing a Knife on him, ao and likewife on another that first entercained the Boy and brought him thither. So they depar-

Here we understood that the Narrobigan fets had spoyled some of Massa forts men, and taken him. This strucke some feare in vs, because the Colony was so weakely guarded, the strength thereof being abroad: But we fet forth with refolution to make the best haste home we could; yet the winde being contrary, having fearce any fresh water left, and at least sixteene leagues home, we put in againe for the shoare. There we met againe with Iyanough the Sachim of Cummaguid, and the most of his Towne, both men, women and children with him. Hee being still willing to gratifie vs. tooke a runlet and led our men in the darke a great way for water but could finde none good ; yet brought fuch as there was on his necke with them. In the meane time the 50 women loyned hand in hand, finging and dancing before the Shallop, the men also shewing all the kindenesse they could, Iranough himselfe taking a Bracelet from about his necke, and hanging it upon one of vs. By Gods prouidence we came fafely home that night,

CHAP. V.

Good newes from New England : Or, A Relation of things remarkeable in that Plantation; written by E. WINSLOVV and here abbreuiated.

He good Ship called the Fortune, which in the Moneth of November 1621. (blefhe die God) arought vs a new supply of fine and thirty persons, was not long departed our Coath, ere the Great people of Nanohig ganger, which are reported to e many thousands strong, began to breath forth many threats against vs, notwith itanding their defired and obtained peace with vs in the fore-going Summer. Informach as the common talke of our neighbour Indians on all fides was of the preparation they made to come against vs, In reason, a man would thinke they should have now more cause to seare vs than before our supply came : but though none of them were present, vet understanding by others that they neither brought Armes nor other prouisions with them. but wholly relied on vs, it occasioned them to sleight and brave vs with so many threats as they did. At length came one of them to vs, who was fent by Conanacus their chiefe Sachim or King. accompanied with one Tokamabamon a friendly Indian. This Messenger inquired for Tisquantum our Interpreter, who not being at home feemed rather to be glad then forry, and leauing for him a bundle of new Arrowes lapped in a rattle Snakes skinne, defired to depart with

When Tilgnanium returned, and the Arrowes were deliuered, and the manner of the Messen- IO gers cariage related, he fignified to the Gouernour, that to fend the rattle Snakes skinne in that manner, imported enmitie, and that it was no better then a challenge. Hereupon, after some deliberation, the Gouernour stuffed the skin with Powder and Shot, and fent it backe, returning no leffe defiance to Conauacus, affuring him if he had Shipping now prefent thereby to fend his men to Nanohio ganfet (the place of his abode) they should not neede to come so farre by Land to vs: yet withall, shewing that they should neuer come vnwelcome or vnlooked for. This message was fent by an Indian, and delivered in such fort, as it was no small terrour to this Sauage King, infomuch as he would not once touch the Powder and Shot, or fuffer it to flay in his House or Countrie. Whereupon the Meffenger refusing it, another tooke it vp, and having beene posted from place to place a long time, at length came whole backe againe.

In the meane time, knowing our owne weakenesse, notwithstanding our high words and loftie lookes towards them, and still lying open to all casualty, having as yet (vnder God) no o-Towneimpa ther detence then our Armes, we thought it most needfull to impale our Towne, which with all expedition we accomplished in the moneth of February, and some few dayes, taking in the top of the Hill under which our Towne is feated, making foure Bulwarkes or letties without; the ordinary circuit of the Pale, from whence we could defend the whole Towne: In three whereof are Gates, and the fourth in time to be. This being done, Captaine Standib divided our ftrength into foure squadrons or companies, appointing whom he thought most fit to have command of each; And at a generall Multer or Training, appointed each his place, gaue each his Company, giuing them charge vpon euery alarum to refort to their Leaders to their appointed place, and in his absence, to be commanded and directed by them. That done according to his order, each drew his Company to his appointed place for defence, and there together discharged their Muskets. After which they brought their new Commanders to their houses, where againe they graced them with their thot, and so departed. Fearing also least the enemy at any time should take any adnantage by firing our houses, Captaine Standifb appointed a certaine Company, that when seuer they faw or heard fire to be cryed in the Towne, should onely betake themselues to their Armes, and should inclose the house or place so indangered, and stand aloose on their guard, with their backes towards the fire, to preuent trechery, if any were in that kinde intended. If the fire were in any of the houles of this guard, they were then freed from it, but not otherwile, without

Long before this time we promifed the people of Massachuset in the beginning of March to come vnto them, and trade for their Furres, which being then come, we began to make preparation for that Voyage. In the meane time, an Indian, called Hobbamocke, who full lived in the Towne, told vs, that he feared the Maffachusets or Masfachusenks (for they so called the people of that place) were inyned in confederacie with the Nanobigganneuchs, or people of Nanobiggarlet, and that they therefore would take this opportunity to cut off Captaine Standal and his Company abroad: but how foeuer in the meane time, it was to be feared that the Nanobig ganeuks would affault the Towne at home, giving many reasons for his icalousie, as also that Tifquantum was in the confederacy, who we should finde would vie many periwasions to draw vs from our Shallops to the Indians houses for their better advantage.

Notwithstanding the forenamed Captaine with ten men, accompanied with Tifquantum and 19 lebbamocke, fet forwards forehow Mental the state of the sta Hobbamocke, fet forwards for the Maffachufers: but we had no fooner turned the point of the Harbour, called the Gwnets nofe (where being becalmed we let fall our grapnell, to fet things to rights, and prepare to row) but there came an Indian of Tifquantums family, running to certaine of our people that were from home with all eagernesse, having his face wounded, and the bloud ftill fresh on the same, calling to them to repaire home, oft looking behinde him, as if some others had him in chate, saying that at Name sibet (a Towne some fifteene miles from vs) there were many of the Nanobig ganfett, Maffaffowat our supposed friend; and Conbatant our feared enemy, with many others, with a resolution to take advantage on the present opportunity, to asfault the Towne in the Captaines absence, affirming that hee received the wound in his face for 60 speaking in our behalfe, and by sleight escaped, looking oft backward, as if he suspected them to be at hand. This he affirmed againe to the Gouernour, whereupon he gaue command that three peece of Ordnance should be made ready and discharged, to the end that if wee were not out of hearing, we might returne thereat. Which we no fooner heard, but we repaired homeward with all convenient speede, arming our felues, and making all in readinesse to fight. When wee entred the Harbour, we saw the Towne like wife on their guard, whither we hasted with all convenient focede. The newes being made knowne vato vs, Hobbamock faid flatly that it was falle, affuring vs of Mall afforats faithfulnelle ; howloguer he prefumed he would neuer haue vndertaken any such act without his prinitie, himselfe being a Pinfe, that is, one of his chiefe Champions or men of valour, it being the manner amongst them not to undertake such enterprises without the advice and furtherance of men of that ranke.

The Governour caused Hobbamock to fend his wife with all privacie to Puckanokick the chiefe place of M. faffowats refidence (pretending other occasions) there to informe her felte, and so vs. to of the right state of things. When she came thither, and saw all things quiet, and that no such matter was or had beene intended, the told Maffafforat what had hapned at Plimoth (by them called Paturet) which when he vinderstood, he was much offended at the carriage of Tilguantum. returning many thankes to the Governour for his good thoughts of him; and affuring him, that according to their first Articles of peace, hee would fend word and give warning when any fuch bufineffe was towards.

Thus by degrees we began to discouer Tisquantum, whose ends were onely to make himselfe great in the eyes of his Country-men, by meanes of his neereneffe and fauour with vs. not caring Tifquentum: who fell, so he stood. In generall, his course was to perswade them hee could lead vs to peace or warre at his pleafure, and would oft threaten the Indians, fending them word in a private man-30 ner, we were intended hortly to kill them, that thereby he might get gifts to himielfe to worke their prace; infomuch as they had him in greater efteeme then many of their Sachims; yea, they themselves sought to him, who promited them peace in respect of vs; yea, and prorection also. to as they would refort to him. So that whereas divers were wont to relie on Mallallowat for protection, and refort to his abode, now they began to leave him, and feeke after Tifquantum. But when we understood his dealings, we certified all the Indians of our ignorance and innocine cy therein, affuring them till they begun with vs, they should have no caule to feare. And if any hereafter should raife any such reports, they should punish them as liers and seekers of their and our diffurbance, which gave the Indians good fatistaction on all fides.

After this we proceeded in our Voyage to the Massachusets, where we had good flore of Trade 30 and (bleffed be God) returned in tafety, though driven from before our Towne in great danger and extremity of weather. At our returne, we found Maffaffowat at the Plantation, who made his feeming just Apologie for all former matters of accusation, being much offended and inraged against Tifquantum, whom the Gouernous pacified as much as he could for the present. But not long after his departure, he fent a Mellenger to the Gouernour, intreating him to gine way to the death of Tifguantum, who had to much abuted him, But the Governour answered : Although he had deferred to dye both in respect of him and vs; yet for our fakes he defired he would spare him, and the rather because without him he knew not well how to understand himselse, or any other the Indians. With this answer the Mellenger returned, but came againe not long after, accompanied with divers others, demanding him from M. f. fowat their Matter, as being one of his to fubiects, whom by our first Articles of peace we could not retaine: yet because hee would not willingly doe it without the Gouernors approbation, offered him many Beners skins for his confent thereto, faying, that according to their manner, their Sachim had fent his own . Kuife, and therewith, to cut off his head and hands, and bring them to him. To which the Governous anfwered : It was not the manner of the English to fell mens lives at a price, but when they had deferued infilly to die, to give them their reward, and therefore refuted their Beauers as a gift ; but fent for Tifquantum, who though he knew their intent, yet offered not to five, but came and accufed Hobbanocke as the author and worker of his ouerthrow; yeelding himfelfe to the Governour to be fent or not according as he thought meete. But at the inflant, when our Gonernour was ready to deliuer him into the hands of his Executioners, a Boate was feene at Sea to use le before our Towne, and fall behinde a head-land not farre off: whereupon, having hear? whereupon, having hear? so rumours of the French, and not knowing whether there were any combination between the Sauages and them, the Gouernour told the Indians, he would first know what Boate that was ere he would deliuer him into their cuftody. But being mad with rage, and impatient at delay, they Here let me not omit one notable (though wicked) practife of this Tifaustem, who to the end he might possesse his Countrimen with the greater feare of vs, and it consequently of himfelfe, told them we had the plague buried in our flore-house, which at our pleasure we could fend forth to what place or people we would, and deftroy them therewith, though wee firred not from home. Being upon the forenamed brabbles fent for by the Governour to this place, where 60 Hobbamock was & some other of vs, the ground being broke in the middelt of the house (whereunder certaine bairels of Powder were buried, though vinknowne to him) Hobbamock asked him what it meant? To whom he readily answered; That was the place wherein the plague was Place conceils buried, whereof he formerly told him and others. After this Hobbamock asked one of our people whether fuch a thing were, and whether we had fuch command of it! Who answered no; But the God of the Engly bhad it inftore, and could fend it at his pleasure to the defluction of his and our enemies.

This was, as I take it, about the end of May, 1 6 2 2. At which time our flore of victuals was wholly foest, having Lued long before with a bare and thort allowance: The reason was, that fumply of menbefore mentioned, which came to unprouided, not landing to much as a barrell of Bread or Male for their whole Company, but contrariwile received from vs for their Ships store boread or all art for their were the fetters forth thereof altogether to beblamed therein, but rather certaine among to our felues, who were too prodigall in their writing and reporting that plenty

we enjoyed. But that I may returne, e emoyes. But proued to be a Shallop that belonged to a fishing Ship, called the Sparrow, set forth 10 by Malter Thomas Weston, late Merchant and Citiz n of London, which brought fix or feuen paffengers at his charge, that should before haue beene landed at our Plantation, who also brought no more proution for the present then served the Boats gang for their returne to the Ship, which made ner Voyage at a place called Damarini Coue, nee e Munhiggen, some forty leagues from vs North-east-ward; about which place there fished about thirty fails of Ships, and whither my felte was imployed by our Gouernour, with orders to take vp fuch victuals as the Shippes could foare; where I found kinsie entertainment and good respect, with a willing nesse to supply our wants: Butbeing not able to spare that quantity I required, by reason of the necessitie of some among it themselves, whom they supplied before my comming, would not take any Bils for the fame, out did what they could freely, withing their flore had beene fuch as they might in greater 20 measure have expressed their owne love, and supplied our necessities, for which they forrowed, prouoking one another to the vtmoft of their abilities : which although it were not much amongitto many people as were at the Plantation, yet through the provident and discrete care of the Gourmours, recoursed and preferred strength till our owne crop on the ground was ready.

Having dispatched there, I returned home with all speede convenient, where I found the state of the Colony much weaker then when I left it: for til now we were neuer without some Bread, the want wheref much abated the strength and flesh of some, and swelled others. But here it may be faid, if the Countrey abound with Fish and Fowle in such measure as is reported, how could men vollegoe fach meabre of hardnesse, except through their own neighbene? I aniwere: Euery thing must be expected in its proper seaton. Noman, as one faid, will goe into an Orchard in the Winter to gather Cherries : io he that lookes for Fowle there in the Summer, will be deceined in his expectation. The time they continue in plency with vs, is from the beginning of October to the end of March : but these extremities befeil vs in May and Iune. I confesse, that as the Fowle decrease, so Fish increase. And indeede their exceeding abundance was a great cause of increasing our wants. For though our Bay and Creekes were full of Balle, and other fish, vet for want of fit and firing Siy set, and other netting, they for the most part brake thorow and carried all away before them. And though the Sea were full of Cod, yet we had neither tackling nor harteis for our Shallops. An a indeede had we not beene in a place where divers forts of Shelfish are that may be taken wit i the hand, we must have perished, vnlesse God had raised some vn- 40 knowne or extraordinary meanes for our prefernation.

In the time of these streits (indeede before my going to Munhiggen) the Indians began againe to cast forth many infulting speeches, glorying in our weakenesse, and giuing out how easie it would be ere long to cut vs eff. Now also Maffalfowat feemed to frowne on vs, and neither came or fent to vs as formerly. These things occasioned further thoughts of Fortification, And whereas we have a Hill called the Mount, inclosed within our Pale, under which our Towne is feated, we refolted to creet a Fort thereon, from whence a few might easily fecure the Town from any allault the Indians can make, whilest the rest might be imployed as occasion lerued. This worke was begun with great eagernesse, and with the approbation of all men, hoping that this being once finished, and a continuall guard there kept, it would otterly discourage the Sa- 10 uages from having any hopes or thoughts of riling against vs. And though it tooke the greatest part of our strength from dressing our Corne, yet (life being continued) wee hoped God would raife fo ne mettes in thead thereof for our further preservation.

In the end of Iune, or beginning of Iuly, came into our harbour two Ships of Mafter Westors planters which aforesaid, the one cilled the Charitie, the other the Swan, having in them some fitte or fixed men fent ouer at his owne charge to plant for him. There we received into our Towne, affording them whatseuer curtesie our meane condition could afford. There the Charitie, beingithe bigger Ship, left them, having many paffengers which the was to land in Virginia. In the meane time, the body of them retreshed themselves at Plimoth, whilest some most he sought our a place for them. That little store of Corne we had, was exceedingly wasted by the vinust and customed 60 walking of these thrangers, who though they would sometimes seeme to helpe vs in curlibour about our Corne, yet spared not day and night to steale the same, it being then eatable, and pleafant to tafte, though green and vnprofitable. And though they received much kindnelle, let light both by it and vs. At length their Coaffers returned, having found in their indgement a place fir for plantation, within the Bay of the Maffachufets, at a place called by the Indians Wichanifsuffet. To which place the body of them went with all convenient speede, leaving still with vs fuch as were ficke and lame, by the Gouernours permiffion, though on their parts undeferued. whom our Surgeon by the helpe of God recourred gratis for them, and they fetched home, as occasion served. They had not beene long from vs, ere the Indians filled our eares with clamours against them, for stealing their Corne, and other abuses conceived by them. At which we grieved the more, because the same men, in mine owne hearing, had beene earnest in perswading Captaine Standilb, before their comming to folicite our Gouernour to fend fome of his men to plant by them, alledging many reasons how it might be commodious for vs. But weeknew no neanes to redresse those abuses, saue reproofe, and adusting them to better walking, as occafion ferued.

CHAP.S. Many clamours. Captainer Supplied. Tempestuous season.

In the end of August came other two Ships into our harbour, the one (as I take it) was called the Difconerie, Captaine lones having the command thereof, the other was that Ship of Mafter Westons, called the Sparrow, which had now made her Voyage of Fish, and was conforted with the other, being both bound for Virginia. Of Captaine lone; we furnished our selues of fuch pro- Helpe from uifions as we most needed, and he could beit spare, who as he vied vs kindely, so made vs pay Master leach largely for the things we had. And had not the Almighty, in his All-ordering Providence, dire-Red him to vs, it would have gone worfe with vs, then ever it had beene, or after was: for, as we had now but small store of Corne for the yeare following : is for want of supply, we were worne 20 out of all manner of trucking-stuffe, not having any meanes left to helpe our felues by trade; but through Gods good mercy towards vs, hee had wherewith, and did supply our wants on that

In the end of September, or beginning of October, Mafter Westons biggest Ship called the Charitie, returned for England, and left their Colony fufficiently victualled, as some of most credit among it them reported. The leffer, called the Swan, remained with his Colony for their further helpe. At which time they defired to loyne in partnership with vs to trade for Corne; to which out Gouernour and his Affiftant agreed upon fuch equall conditions, as were drawne and confirmed betweene them and vs. The chiefe places aimed at were to the Southward of Cape Cod; and the more because Tifquantum, whose peace before this time was wrought with Mas 30 fallowet, vndertooke to discouer vnto vs that supposed, and ftill hoped pallage within

Both Colonies being thus agreed, our Gouernour in his owne person supplied the Captaines place, and in the month of November fet forth, having Tifquantum for his Interpreter and Pis lot, who affirmed he had twice pailed within the Sholes of Cape Cod, both with English and French. Neuertheleffe, they went to farre with him, as the Matter of the Ship faw no hope of paffige : but being (as he thought) in danger, bare vp, and according to Tifquantums directions. made for an harbour not farre from them, at a place called Manamoyeke, which they found and founding it with their Shallop found the channell, though but narrow and srooked, where at at length they harboured the Ship. Here they perceived that the Tide fet in and out with more to violence at some other place more Southerly, which they had not feene nor could discouer , by realon of the violence of the feason all the time of their abode there. Some judged the entrance thereof might be beyond the Shotes, but there is no certainty thereof as yet knowne. That night the Governour accompanied with others, having Tifquantum for his Interpreter went ashoare : At first the Inhabitante plaied leaft in fight, because none of our people had euer beene there before; but understanding the ends of their comming, at length came to them, welcomming out Godernour according to their Sauage manner, refreshing them very well with store of Venison and other victuals which they brought them in great abundance, promiting to trade with them, with a feeming gladnesse of the occasion: yet their ioy was mixed with much lealousie, as appeared by their after practifes: for at first they were loath their dwellings should be knowne, but when they faw our Gouetnours resolution to flay on the shoare all night, they brought him to 50 their houses, having first convaied all their stuffe to a remote place, not sarre from the same, which one of our men walking forth occasionally, espied; whereupon, on the sudden, neither it nor they could be found, and so many times after vpon conceiued occasions, they would be all gone, bag and baggage. But being afterwards (by Tifquantums meanes) better perswaded, they left their lealoulie and traded with them; where they got eight hogheads of Corne and Beanes, though the people were but few. This gaue our Gouernour and the Company good encouragement. Tifquantum being itill confident in the passage, and the Inhabitants affirming, they had feene Ships of good burthen paffe within the Sholes aforefaid. Bur here, though they had determined to make a fecond affay, yet God had otherwaies disposed, who strucke Tefquantoms with 60 ficknesse, in so much as he there died, which crossed their Southward trading, and the more, becaule the Maifers lufficiency was much doubted, and the feafon very tempestuous, and not fit to goe voon discouery, having no guide to direct them.

From thence they departed, and the winde being faire for the Maffachusers, went thither, and the rather because the Sauages vpon our motion had planted much Corne for vs., which they

promifed not long before that time. When they came thicher, they found a great fickneffe to be among it the Indians, not valike the Plague, if not the seme. They remued their complaints to our Governour, against that other Plantation seated by them, for their injurious walking. But indeede the trade both for Furres and Come was overthrowne in that place, they giving as much for a quart of Corne, as we vied to doe for a Beauers skin; fo that little good could be there done. From thence they returned into the bottome of the Bay of Cape Cod, to a place called Nanfer. where the Sachim wied the Gouernour very kindely, and where they bought eight or ten hogiheads of Corne and Beanes. Also at a place called Mattachiest, where they had like kinde enserrainment and Corne alio. During the time of their trade in these places, there were so great and violent stormes, as the Ship was much endangered, and our Shallop cast away, so that they to had now no meanes to carry the Corne aboard that they had bought, the Ship riding by their report well neere two leagues from the same, her owne Boate being small, and so leake (hauins no Carpenter with them) as they durft scarce fetch wood or water in her. Hereupon the Gouernour caused the Corne to be made in a round stacke, and bought Mats, and cut Sedge to couer it, and gave charge to the Indians not to meddle with it, promiting him that dwelt next to it a reward, if he would keepe vermine also from it, which he vindertooke, and the Saebim promised to make good. In the meane time, according to the Gouernors request, the Sactim fent men to feek the Shallop, which they found buried almost in fand at a high-water marke, having many thines remaining in her, but vnieruiceable for the present; whereof the Gouernour gaue the Sachim foeciall charge that it should not be further broken. And having procured a Guide, it being no lesse then fiftie miles to our Plantation, fet forward, receiuing all respect that could be from the Indians in his journey, and came fafely home, though weary and jurbated, whether some three dayes after the Ship also came. The Corne being divided which they had got, Master Wellons Company went to their owne Plantation, ic being further agreed, that they should returne with all convenient speede, and bring their Carpenter, that they might fetch the rest of the Corne, and faue their Shallop. At their returne Captaine Standift being recourred and in health, tooke another Shallop, and went with them to the Corne, which they found in fafety as they left it: alio they mended the other Shallop, and got all their Corne aboard the Ship. This was in lanuary, as I take it, it being very cold and stormy, insomuch as (the harbour being none of the best) they were constrained to 30 cut both the Shallops from the Ships sterne, and so lost them both a second time. But the storme being ouer, and feeking oue, they found them both, not having received any great hure. Whileft they were at Naufes, having occasion to lye on the shoare, laying their Shallop in a Creeke not faire from them, an Indian came into the fame, and stole certaine Beads, Ciffers, and other trifies out of the same, which when the Captaine missed, he tooke certaine of his company with him, and went to the Sachim, telling him what had hapned, and requiring the fame againe, or the party that ftole them (who was knowne to certaine of the Indians) or elfe he would revenge it on them before his departure, and so tooke leave for that night being late, refusing whatfor wer kindneffe they offered. On the morrow, the Sachien came to their randenow, accompanied with many men, in a stately manner, who faluting the Captaine in this wife; He thrust out his tongue, 40 that one might fee the roote thereof, and therewith licked his hand from the wrift to the fingers end, withall bowing the knee, ftriuing to imitate the English gefture, being instructed therein formerly by Tilquanium: his men did the like, but inforude and Sauage a manner, as our men could scarce forbeare to breake out in open laughter. After salutation, he delivered the Beads, and other things to the Captaine, faying, he had much beaten the party for doing it, causing the women to make Bread, and bring them, according to their delire, feeming to be very forry for the fact, but glad to be reconciled. So they departed, and came home in latery; where the Coune was equally divided, as before. After this, the Gouernour went to two other inland Townes, with another Company, and bought Corne likewise of them, the one is called Namaikes, the other Manomes. That from Na-50 market was brought home partly by Indian women; but a great fickneffe ariting amongst them, our owne men were inforced to fetch home the reft. That at Manomer the Gouernour left in the Sachinss custody: this Towne lieth from vs South well neere twenty miles, and stands upon 2 fresh River, which runneth into the Bay of Nanobigganset, and cannot be leffe then fixty miles from thence. It will beare a Boat of eight or ten tun to this place. Hither the Duich, or French, or both vieto come, It is from hence to the Bay of Cape Cod about eight miles; out of which Bay it floweth into a Creeke some fix miles almost direct towards the Towne. The heads of the River, and this Creeke, are not farre diffant. This River yeeldeth thus high, Oysters, Muscles, Clams, and other Shel-fish, one in shape like a Beane, another like a Clam, both good meate, and great abundance at all times; besides it aboundeth with divers sorts of trelh fish in their seasons. 60 The Governous or Sachim of this place, was called Canacum, who had formerly, as well as many others (yea all with whom as yet we had to doe) acknowledged themselves the Subjects of our Soueraigne Lord the King. This Sachim vied the Gouernour very kindely, and it fremed was of good respect and authority amongst the Indians. For whilest the Gouernour was there within CHAP. 5. Tobacco and Beades. Abundance of Basse. Colonie. night in bitter weater, came two men from Manamoick, before spoken of, and having fet afide their Bowes and Quiuers, according to their manner, fat down by the fire, and tooke a pipe of Tobacco, not ving any words in that time, nor any other to them; but all remained filent, expecting when they would ipeake: At length they looked toward Canacum, and one of them made a thort (peech, and delivered a prefent to him from his Sachim, which was a basket of Tobacco, and many Beades, which the other received thankfully. After which, he made a long fpeech to him, the contents hereof was related to vs by Hobbamock (Who then accompanied the Gouernour for his Guide) to be as followeth; It hapned that two of their men fell out as they were in game (for they vie gaming as much as any where, and will play away all, even their skin from their Sauages great to backs, yea and for their wives skins alfo, though it may be they are many miles diffant from them, gamfters, as my telte haue feene) and growing to great heat, the one killed the other. The actor of this tact was a Powah, one of specials note among it them, and such an one as they could not well misse, yet another people greater then themselnes threatned them with warre, if they would not put him to death. The partie offending was in hold, neither would their Saebim doe one way or other till their returne, retting spon him for aduce and furtherance in fo weightie a matter. After this there was filence a short time; at length men gave their judgement what they thought best. Amone ft others, he asked Hobbamock what ne thought ! Who answered, he was but's ftranger to them, but thought it was better that one should die then many, fince he had deserved it, and the rest were innocent; whereupon he passed the sentence of death vpon him. Not long after (auing no great quantitle of Corne left) Captaine Standif went againe with a Shallon to Mattachieft, meeting allo with the like extremitie of weather, both of winde. Snow, and Froft, intomuch as they were frozen in the harbour the first night they entred the lame. Here they pretended their wonted love, and spared them a good quantitie of Corne to confirme the fame: Strangers also came to this place, precending onely to fee him and his Companie, whom they never faw before that time, but intending to joyne with the reft to kill them, as after appeared. But being forced through extremitie to lodge in their houses, which they much preffed, God possessed the heart of the Captaine with infliealousie, giving strait command, that as Inflicalousie one part of his Companie flept, the rest should wake, declaring some things to them which he vinderstood, whereof he could make no good construction. Some of the Indians spring a fit op-30 portunitie, stole some Beades also from him, which he no sooner perceiued, hauing not aboue ix men with him, drew them all from the Boat, and fet them on their goard about the Sachims house, where the most of the people were, threatning to fall vpon them without further delay. if they would not forthwith reftors them, fignifying to the Sachim especially, and so to them all. that as he would not offer the least injurie, so he would not receive any at their hands, which should eleape without plinishment or due fatisfaction. Hereupon the Sachim bestirred him to finde out the partie, which when he had done, caused him to returne them agains to the Shallop, and came to the Captaine, desiring him to search whether they were not about the Boat, who fuspe Ring their knauerie, fent one, who found them lying openly voon the Boats cuady; yet to appeale his anger, they brought Corne afresh to trade, infomuch as he laded his Shallop, and so do departed. This accident fo daunted their courage, as they durft not attempt any thing against him. So that through the good mercy and prouidence of God they returned in fafetie. At this Base Summer place the Indians get abundance of Baile both Summer and Winter, for it being now February and Winter.

In the beginning of March, having refreshed himselfe, he tooke a Shallop, and went to Mansmet, to ferch home that which the Governour had formerly bought, hoping also to get more from them, but was deceived in his expectation, not finding that entertainment he found elfewhere, and the Gouernour had therereceived. The reason whereof, and of the trecherie intended in the place before spoken of, was not then knowne vnto vs. but afterwards : wherein may be observed the abundant mercies of God working with his providence for our good. Captaine Standifb being now farre from the Boat, and not aboue two or three of our men with 50 him, and as many with the Shallop, was not long at Canacum the Sachims liquie, but in came two of the Maffachuset men, the chiefe of them was called Waumamet, a notable infulting villaine, one who had formerly imbrued his hands in the bloud of English and French, and had oft boafted of his owne valour, and derided their weakneffe, effectilly because (as he faid) they died crying, making fowre faces, more like children then men. This villaine tooke a dagger from about his necke (which hee had gotten of Miffer Westons people) and presented it to the Sachim, and after made a long speech in an audacious manner, framing on it in fuchtort, as the Captaine (though he be the best Linguist amongst vs) could not gather any thing from it. The end of it was afterward diffcouered to be as followeth: The Maf-60 Sachenfeuckes formerly concluded to ruinate Mafter Westons Colonie, and thought them-

felues, being about thirty or forty men strong, enough to execute the same : yet they durit not attempt it, till fich time as they had gathered more frength to themselves to make their partie good against vs at Plimoth, concluding, that if wee remained (though they had no other Arguments to vie again t vs) yet wee would neuer leade the death of 2999999

our Countrimen vnreuenged, and therefore their safetie could not be without the ouerthrow of both Plantations. To this end they had formerly folicited this Sachim, as also the other called lanoueb at Mattacbieft, and many others to affit them, and now againe came to profecute the same; and since there was so faire an opportunitie offered by the Captaines prefence, they thought best to make sure him and his Company. After this message was deliuered, his entertainment much exceeded the Captaines, infomuch as hee formed at their behaniour, and told them of it: after which, they would have perswaded him, because the weather was cold, to haue fent to the Boate for the rest of his Company, but he would not. defiring according to promife, that the Corne might be carried downe, and he would content the women for their libour, which they did. At the same time there was a lusty Indian of Io Pagnet or Cap: Cod then prefent, who had ever demeaned himselfe well towards vs, being in his generall carriage very affable, courteous, and louing, especially towards the Captaine. This Sause was now entred into confederacie with the reft, yet to avoide suspition, made many figures of his continued aff. Ctions, and would needes befrow a Kettle of fome fix or feven gallons on him, and would not accept of any thing in lieu thereof, faying, he was rich, and could afford to bettow fuch fanours on his friends whom he loued; also hee would freely helpe to carry tome of the Corne, ffirming he had never done the like in his life before, and the winde being bad would needes lodge with him at their Randeuow, having indeede vndertaken to kill him before they parted, which done they intended to fall vpon the reft. The night proued exceeding cold, infomuch as the Captaine could not take any reft, but either walked or tur- 20 ned himselfe to and froat the fire: This the other observed, and asked wherefore he cid not fleepe as at other times, who answered he knew not well, but had no defire at all to reft. So that he then milt hisopportunity. The winde feruing on the next day, they returned home, accompanied with the other Indian, who yied many arguments to perswade them to go to Paomes, where himself had much Corne, and many other, the most wherof he would procure for vs, seeming to forrow for our wants. Once the Captaine put forth with him, and was torced backe by contrary winde; which winde ferued for the Mafachufet, was fitted to goe thither. But on a fudden it altered againe.

During the time that the Captaine was at Manomer, newes came to Plimoth that Maffaffewat was like to die, and that at the fame time there was a Duteb Ship driven io high on the shoare by stress of weather, right before his dwelling, that till the tides encreased, the could not be got off. Now it being a commendable manner of the Indians, when any (especially of note) are dangeroully ficke, for all that profeile friendihip to them, to visit them in their extremity, eitherin their persons, or else to send some acceptable persons to them, therefore it was thought meete (being a good and warrantable action) that as we had euer professed friendship, so we should now maintaine the same, by obteruing this their laudable custome; and the rather, because we defined to have some conference with the Duich, not knowing when we should have so fit an opportunity. To that end my felfe having formerly beene there, and understanding in some measure the Dutch tongue, the Governour againe laid this feruice vpon my felfe, and fitted me with fome cordials to administer to him, having one Master John Hamden a Gentleman of London (who then wintered with vs, and defired much to fee the Country) for my Confert, and Hobbamocke for our 40 guide, So we fet forward, and lodged the first night at Namacket, where we had friendly enter-

The next day about one of the clock, we came to a ferrie in Conbatants Country, where vpon discharge of my Peece, divers ludious came to vs from a house not far off. There they told vs, that Maffafforat was dead, and that day buried, and that the Dutch would be gone before we could get thicher, having houe off their Ship already. This newes strucke vs blanke; but especially H.b. bamocke, who defired we might returne with all speede. I told him I would first thinke of it, confidering now that he being dead, Combatant was the most like to succeede him, and that we were not about three miles from Massapunft his dwelling place, although he were but a hollow-hearted friend towards vs, I thought no time io fit as this, to enter into more friendly tearmes with 50 him, and the rest of the Sachines thereabout, hoping (through the bleffing of God) it would be a meanes in that vnietled state, to fettle their affections towards vs, and though it were somewhat dangerous, in respect of our personall safety, because my selfe and Hobbamocke had beene imployed vpon a feruice against him, which he might now fitly reuenge; yet esteeming it the best means, leaving the event to God in his mercy, I resolved to put it in practife, if Master Hamden and Hobbamock durft attempt it with me, whom I found willing to that or any other course might tend to the generall good. So we went towards Mattapunft. In the way, Hobbamocke manifelling a troubled spirit, brake forth into these speeches, Neen womas Sagimus, neen womas a Sagimus, oc. My louing Sachim, my louing Sachim. Many haue I knowne, but neuer any like thee: And turning him to me faid; Whilelt I hued, I should neuer see his like among the Indians, saying, he 60 was no lyer, he was not bloudy and cruell like other Indians; In anger and passion he was some reclaimed, casie to be reconciled towards such as had offended him, ruled by reason in such meafure, as he would not fcorne the aduice of meane men, and that he gouerned his men better with few stroakes then others did with many; truely louing where he loued; yea, he scared we had not a faithfull friend left among the Indians, the wing how he oft-times reftrained their malice, &c. continuing a long speech with such signes of lamentarion and vasteined forrow, as it would have made the hardeit heart relent.

At length we came to Mastapuyst, and went to the Sachimo Comaco (for so they called the Sachims place, though they call an ordinary house Wisco) but Combatant the Sachim was not at home, but at Packanokick, which was some fine or fix miles off; the Squa fachim (for so they call Sachims wife) gaue vs friendly entertainment. Here we enquired againe concerning Maffaffowat, they thought him dead, but knew no certainty; wherupon I hired one to goe with all expedition to Puckanokick, that we might know the certainty thereof, and withall to acquaint f'ombatant to with our there being. About halfe an houre before Sun-ferting, the messenger returned, and told vs that he was not yet dead, though there was no hope we should finde him living. V pon this we were much reuiued, and fet forward with all speede, though it was late within night ere we got thither. About two of the clock that afternoone the Dutchmen departed, fo that in that refp. & our journie was frustrate. When we came thither, we found the house to full of men, as we could fearce get in, though they vied their beit diligence to make way for vs. There were they in the comforters, middelt of their charmes for him, making fuch a hellish noile, as it diftempered vs that were well, and therefore volike to ease him that was ficke. About him were fix or eight women, who chated his armes, legs, and thighes, to keep heat in him : when they had made an end of their charming, one told him that his friends the English were come to fee him (hauing vinderstanding left, but his 30 fight was wholly gone) he asked wno was come, they told him Winfinon (for they cannot pronounce the letter I, but ordinarly n in the place thereof) he defired to speake with me : when I came to him, & they told him of it, he put forth his hand to me, which I took; then he faid twice, though very inwardly, keen Win (now, which is to fay, art thou Win low? I answered, abbe, that is, yes;

then he doubled thele words, Matta neen wonchanet namen Win from that is to fay, O Win flow I shall neuer (ee thee agam. Then I called Hobbamock, and defired him to tell Mallafowas, that the Gouernor hearing of his ticknes, was forry for the same, & though by reason of many businesses he could not come himfelfe, yet he lent me with fuch things for him as he thought most likely, to doe him good in this extremity, and whereof if he pleased to take, I would presently give him; which he defired, and having a confection of many comtortable Conferues, on the point of my Knife I gaue 30 him fome, which I could flarce get thorow his teeth; when it was diffolued in his mouth, he fwallowed the juice of it, whereat those that were about him much reioyced, saying, he had not swallowed any thing in two daies before. Then I defired to fee his mouth, which was exceedingly furred, and his tongue swelled in such manner, as it was not possible for him to eat such meat as they had, his passage being stopt vp. Then I washed his mouth, and scraped his tongue, & got abundance of corruption out of the fame. After which, I gaue him more of the confection, which he swallowed with more readines; then he defired to drinke, I dissolued some of it in water, and gaue him thereof: within halfe an houre this wrought a great alteration in him in the eies of all that beheld him: presently after his fight began to come to him. In the meane time I inquired how he slept, and when he went to ftoole! They taid he flept not in two daies before, & had not had a ftoole in fine; 40 then I gaue him more, and told him of a mishap we had by the way in breaking a bottle of drink, which the Gouernour also sent him, saying, if he would fend any of his men to Pataxet, I would fend for more of the same, also for Chickens to make him broth, & for other things which I knew were good for him, and would flay the returne of the Messenger, if he desired. This he tooke maruellous kindly, and appointed some, who were ready to go by two of the clock in the morning, against which time I made ready a Letter, declaring therein our good successe, the state of his body &c.desiring to fend such things as I fent for, and such physicke as the Surgion durst administer to him, He requested me that the day following, I would take my Peece, and kill him some Fowle, and make him some English pottage, such as he had eaten at Plimoth, which I promised : after his Romacke comming to him, I must needes make him some without Fowle, before I went abroad, which formewhat troubled meet but being I must doe formewhat. I caused a woman to bruise some Corne, and take the flower from it, and let ouer the grut or broken Corne in a Pipkin (for they have earthen Pots of all fizes.) When the day broke, we went out (it being now March) to feeke hearbes, but could not finde any but Strawberrie leaues, of which I gathered a handful & put into the same, and because I had nothing to relish it, I went forth againe, and pulled wp a Saxafras root, and fliced a peece thereof, and boiled it till it had a good relish, and then tooke it out againe. The broth being boiled, I strained it thorow my handkerchiffe, and gaue him at least a pinte, which he dranke, and liked it very well. After this, his fight mended more and more, also he had three moderate Hooles, and tooke some rest : Insomuch, as we with admiration bleffed God for giving his bleffing to fuch raw and ignorant meanes, making no doubt of his recovery, himfelfe and all of 60 them acknowledging vs the instruments of his preservation. That morning he caused me to spend in going from one to another amongst those that were sicke in the Town, requesting me to wash their mouthes also, and give to each of them some of the same I gave him, saying, they were good folke. This paines I tooke with willing refle, though it were much offenfine to me, not being accultomed with fuch poisonous fauours.

The Messengers were now returned, but finding his stomacke come to him, he would not have the Chickens killed, but kept them for breede. Neither durit we give him any physicke which was then fent, because his body was so much altered since our instructions, neither faw we any neede, not doubting now of his recouery, if he were carefull, Many whilest we were there came to fee him, tome by their report from a place not leffe then an hundred miles. Vpon this his recourty, he brake forth into thele speeches; Now I fee the English are my friends and loue me, and whileft I line I will neuer forget this kindenesse they have shewed me. Whilest wee were there. our entertainment exceeded all other strangers. At our comming away, he called Hobbamocketo him, and privately (none hearing faue two or three other of his Pueefes, who are of his Counfell) revealed the plot of the Maffachenfencks before spoken of, against Master Westons Colony. 10 and to against vs, taying that the people of Naufet, Paomet, Succouet Mattachieft, Manomet Ago. warmam, and the He of Capamack, were joyned with them; himselfe also in his sickcasse was earnestly follicited, but he would neither joyne therein, nor give way to any of his. Therefore as we respected the lines of our Countrimen, and our owne after-safety, he adusted vs to kill the men of Maffachnfet, who were the authors of this intended mischiefe. And whereas we were wont to lay, we would not thrike a ftroke till they first began; if faid he vpon this intelligence. they make that aniwer, tell them, when their Countrimen at Wichagufonffet are killed, they being not able to defend themselves, that then it will be too late to recover their lives, nay through the He reuealeth the treckty of multitude of adueriaries they shall with great difficultie preserve their own, & therefore he countries they shall with great difficultie preserve their own, & therefore he countries they shall with great difficultie preserve their own, & therefore he countries they shall with great difficultie preserve their own, & therefore he countries they shall with great difficulties preserve their own, & therefore he countries they shall with great difficulties preserve their own, & therefore he countries they shall with great difficulties preserve their own, & therefore he countries they shall with great difficulties preserve their own, & therefore he countries they shall with great difficulties preserve their own, & therefore he countries they shall with great difficulties preserve their own, & therefore he countries they shall with great difficulties they shall be a sh felled without delay to take away the principals, and then the plot would ceafe. With this hee 20 charged him thorowly to acquaint me by the way, that I might informe the Gouernour thereof at my first comming home. Being fitted for our returne, we tooke our leaue of him, who returned many thankes to out Gouernour, and also to our selves for our labour and loue : the like aid all that were about him. So we departed.

That night, thorow the earnest request of Combatant, who till now remained at Samaams or Puckanubick, we lodged with him at Mattapurft. By the way I had much conference with him. to like wife at his house, he being a notable politician, yet full of merry iests and squibs, and neper better pleased then when the like are returned againe voon him. Amongst other things he asked me, It in cate he were thus dangeroully ficke, as Maffaffowat had beene, and should fend word thereof to Painxet for Masket, that is, Phylicke, whether then Master Gouernour would fend it? and if he would, whether I would come therewith to him? To both which I answered yea; whereat he gaue me many joyfull thankes. After that, being at his house, he demanded further, how we durit being but two come fo farre into the Country ! I answered, where was true love there was no feare, and my heart was so vpright towards them, that for mine owne part I was fearelesse to come amongst them. But, said he, if your love be such, and it bring forth such fruits, how commeth it to paffe, that when we come to Patures, you fland vpon your guard, with the mouthes of your Peeces presented towards vs ? Whereupon I answered, it was the most honorable and respective entertainment we could give them; it being an order among it vs so to receive our best respected friends : and as it was vied on the Land, to the Ships observed it also at Sea, which Hobbamock knew, and had feene observed. But shaking the head, heanswered, that he 40 liked not fuch falutations.

Further, obseruing vs to craue a bleffing on our meate before we did eate, and after to give thankes for the lame, he asked vs what was the meaning of that ordinary custome? He reupon I tooke occasion to tell them of Gods workes of Creation, and Preservation, of the Lawes and Ordinances, especially of the ten Commandements, all which they hearkned vnto with great attention, and liked well of; onely the feuenth Commandement they excepted against, thinking there were many inconveniences in it, that a man should be tied to one woman: about which we reasoned a good time. Also I told them, that what sever good things we had, we received from God, as the Author and giver thereof, and therefore craved his bletting vpon that we had, and were about to cate, that it might nourish and strengthen our bodies, and having eaten sufficie 50 ent, being satisfied therewith, we againe returned thankes to the same our God for that our refreshing, &c. This all of them concluded to be very well, and faid, they believed almost all the fame things, and that the same power that we called God, they called Kietstan. Much profitable conference was occasioned hereby, which would be too tedious to relate, yet was no leste delightfull to them, then comfortable to vs. Here we remained onely that night, but neuer had better entertainment amongst any of them.

The day following, in our journey, Hobbamocke told me of the private conference he had with Maffaffornat, and how he charged him perfectly to acquaint me therewith (as I shewed before) which having done, he vied many arguments himfelte to moue vs thereunto: That night we lodged at Namasket, and the day following about the mid-way betweene it and home, we met 60 two Indians, who told vs that Captaine Standift was that day gone to the Majachnfets : but contrary windes againe draue him backe, so that we found him at home; where the Indian of Panmet still was, being very importunate that the Captaine should take the first opportunitie of a faire winde to goe with him, but their fecret and villanous purpofes being through Gods mercy now made knowne, the Gouernour caused Captaine Standillo to fend him away without anv diftafte or manifestation of anger, that we might the better effect and bring to passe that which should be thought most necessary.

Before this journey we heard many complaints both by the Indians and some others of best desert amongst Master Wester & Colony, how exceedingly their Company abased themselues by undirect meanes, to get victuals from the Indians, who dwelt not farre from them, ferching them wood & water, &c, and all for a meales meate, whereas in the meane time, they might with diligence have gotten enough to have ferued them three or foure times. Other by night brake the earth, and robbed the Indians flore, for which they had beene publiquely flocked and whipt, to and yet was there small amendment. This was about the end of February, at which time they had front all their Bread and Corne, not leaving any for Seede, neither would the Irdians lend or fell them any more voon any tearmes. Hereupon they had thought to take it by violence, and to that (piked vp euery entrance into their Towne (being well impaled) faue one, with a full refolution to proceede. But some more honestly minded, aduited lobn Sanders their Ouer-seer first to write to Plimeth, and if the Gouernor aduised him thereunto, he might the better doe it. They fent, and our Gouernour writ divers reasons of dillike. With these Letters wee dispatched the Mellenger ; Vpon the receipt whereof they altered their determination, resoluting to shift as they could, till the returne of Iohn Sanders from Manhiggen, who first comming to Plimoth, notwithstanding our owne necessities, the Gouernour spared him fome Corne to carrie them to 20 Manbiggen. But not hauing sufficient for the Ships store, he tooke a Shallop, and leaving others with initructions to ouer-fee things till his returne, fer forward about the end of February, fo that he knew not of this confpiracie of the Indians before his going, neither was it knowne to any of vs till our returne from Samaams or Packanakick: at which time also another Sanealed the fame thing.

chim called Wassapinewat, brother to Obratiest the Sachim of the Massachusete, who had formerly finarted for partaking with Conbatant, and fearing the like againe, to purge himlelfe, re-

The three and twentieth of March being now come, which is a yearely Court day, the Gouernour having a double testimony, and many circumstances agreeing with the truth thereof, not being to vndertake warre without the confent of the body of the Company; made knowne the 30 same in publique Court. We came to this conclusion, That Captaine Standift should take so many men as he thought sufficient to make his party good against all the Indians in the Maffachafes Bay; & becaule (as all men know that have had to doe in that kinde) it is impossible to deale with them youn open defiance, but to take them in such traps as they lay for others; therfore he should pretend trade as at other times: but first goe to the English, & acquaint them with the plot, & the end of his owne comming, that comparing it with their carriages towards them, he might better indge of the certainty of it, and more fitly take opportunity to revenge the same: but should forbeare if it were possible till such time as he could make sure Witumamat, that bloudy & bold villain before spoken of, whose head he had order to bring with him, that hee might be a warning and terrour to all that disposicion. Vpon this, Captaine Standifb made choice of eight men , and 40 would not take more because he would prevent lealousse, knowing their guilty consciences would foone be prouoked thereunto : but on the next day before he could goe, came one of Master Weflons Company by land vnto vs, with his packe at his backe, who made a pittifull narration of their lamentable and weake estate, and of the Indians carriages, whose boldnesse increased abundantly, infomuch as the victuals they got, they would take it out of their Pots and eate before lence. their faces, yea if in any thing they gaine-said them, they were ready to hold a Knife at their breafts; that to give them content, fince Iohn Sanders went to Munhingen, they had hanged one of them that Role their Corne, and yet they regarded it not : that another of their Company was turned Sauage, that their people had most forsaken the Towne, and made their randeuous where they got their victuals, because they would not take paines to bring it home; that they had sold their cloathes for Corne, and were ready to starue both with cold and hunger also, because they 50 could not indure to get victuals by reason of their nakednesse: and that they were dispersed into three Companies, scarce having any Powder and Shot left. As this Relation was grieuous to vs, fo it gaue vs good encouragement to proceede in our intendments, for which Captaine Standib was now fitted, and the winde comming faire, the next day fet forth for the

The Indians at the Massachusets missed this man, and suspecting his comming to vs , as wee conceine, fent one after him, and gaue out there that he would never come to Palaxet, but that fome Wolues or Beares would eare him : but we know not by our owne experience, and the report of others, that though they finde a man fleeping, yet so soone as there is life discerned, they 60 feare and thun him. This Indian miffed him but very little, and miffing him paffed by the towne and went to Manomet, whom we hoped to take at his returne, as afterward we did. Now was our Fort made fit for service and some Ordnance mounted; and though it may seeme long worke it being ten moneths fince it begun, yet we must note, that where so great a worke is begun with fuch small meanes, a little time cannot bring to perfection; beside those workes which tend to the preferration of man, the enemy of mankinde will hinder what in him lieth, sometimes blinin gement, and causing reasonable men to reason against their own fafety. The Indian left mentioned in his returns from Monomet, came through the Towne, pretending itill friendfhin and in love to fee vs. but as formerly others, so his end was to fee whether wee continued full in health and strength, or fell into weakenesse like their neighbours, which they hoped and looked for (though God in mercy prouised better for vs) and hee knew would be glad tydings to his Countrie men. But here the Gouernour stail him, and fending for him to the Fort, there gathe the Guard charge of him as their prisoner, where he told him hee must be contented to remaine till the return of Captain Standift from the Maffachufets, to he was locked in a chaine to a staple in the Court of guard, and there kept. Thus was our Fort hanfelled, this being the first day as I take it. 10 that ever any watch was there kept.

The Captaine being now come to the Maffachufets, went first to the Ship , butfound neither man or fo much as a Dogge therein: vpon the discharge of a Musket the Master and some others of the Plantation thewed themfelues, who were on the thore gathering ground-nuts, and getting other foode. After falutation, Captaine Standifb asked them how they durft fo leave the Ship. and line in fuch fecurity, who answered like men sentlesse of their owne misery, they feared not the Indians but hue I and fuffered them to lodge with them, not having Sword or Gunne.or needing the same. To which the Captaine answered, if there were no cause he was the gladder, but woon further inquiry, understanding that those in whom John Sanders had reposed most speciall confidence and left in his fread to gouerne the rest, were at the Plantation : thither he went, and 20 to be briefe, made knowne the Indians purpose, and the end of his owne comming, as also (which formerly I omitted) that if afterward they durit not there flay, it was the intendment of the Gouernours and people of Plimouth there to receive them till they could be better provided; but if they conceived of any other course that might be more likely for their good, that himselfe should further them therein to the vttermost of his power. These men comparing other circumstances with that they now heard, aniwered, they could expect no better, and it was Gods mercy that they were not killed before his comming, defiring therefore that he would neglect no opportunity to proceede: Hereupon he aduised them to secrecy, yet withall to send special command to one third of their Company that were farthest off to come home, and there enjoyee them on paine of death to keepe the Towne, himfelfe allowing them a pint of Indian Corne to a man for a day (though that flore he had was spared out of our Seede.) The weather prouing very wet and flormy at was the longer before he could doe any thing. In the meane time an Indian came to him and brought some Furres, but rather to gather what he could from the Captaines, then comming then for trade; and though the Captaine carried things as smoothly as possibly he could, yet at his returne he reported he saw by his eyes that he was angry in his heart, and therefore began to suspect themselves discovered. This caused one Peckfuot who was a Pinefe, being a man of a notable spirit to come to Hobbamocke who was then with them, and told him hee vinderstood that the Captaine was come to kill himselfe and the rest of the Sauages there; tell him, said he, we know it, but feare him not, neither will we shun him ; but let him begin when he dare, he shall not take vs at vnawares : many times af- 40 ter, divers of them severally, or few together, came to the Plantation to him, where they would whet and tharpen the point of their Kniues before his face, and vie many other infulting geflures and speeches. Amongst the rest, Witnmanat bragged of the excellency of his Knife, on the end of the handle there was pictured a womans face, but faid hee, I have another at home wherewith I have killed both French and English, and that hath a mans face on it, and by and by these two must marry : Further he said of that Knife he there had ; Hinnains namen, hinnain michen, matta cuts: that is to lay, By and by it should see, and by and by it should eaten but not speake. Also Peck fuor being a man of greater stature then the Captaine, told him, though he were a great Captaine, yet he was but a little man : and faid he, though I be no Sachim, yet I am a man of great ftrength and courage. These things the Captaine observed, yet bare with patience for the pre- 19 fent. On the next day, feeing he could not get many of them together at once, and this Peckfuot and Witnwamat both together, with another man, and a youth of some eighteene yeares of age, which was brother to Witumamat, and villaine-like trode in his steps, daily putting many trickes upon the weaker fort of men, and having about as many of his owne Company in a roome with them, gaue the word to his men, and the doore being fall flut, began himselfe with Perce Sauages flain. [uot, and fnatching his owne Knife from his necke, though with much ftrugling, killed him therewith, the point whereof he had made as tharpe as a needle, and ground the backe also to an edge: Witumamar and the other man, the rest killed, and tooke the youth, whom the Captaine caused to be hanged; but it is incredible how many wounds thefe two Pueeles received before they died, not making any fearefull noyfe, but catching at their weapons and ftriuing to the latt. Hobba- 60 mocke itood by all this time as a spectator and medled not, obseruing how our men demeaned themselves in this action : all being here ended, smiling, he brake forth into these speeches to the

a great Captaine, yet you were but a lttle man; but to day I fee you are big enough to lay him on the ground. But to proceede, there being fome women at the same time, Captaine Standish left them in the custody of Master Westons people at the Towne, and fent word to another Company that had intelligence of things to kill thole Indian men that were amongst them, these kil-Led two more: himfelte also with some of his owne men went to another place, where they kil. led another, and through the negligence of one man an Indian escaped, who discouered and croifed their proceedings. Not long before this Execution, three of Master Westons men, which more regarded their bel- Savage Ent-

The first to night they came thither within night lace came a Meffenger with all speede, and delivered a fad and fhort meffage: Whereupon all the men gathered together, put on their Bootes and Breeches, truffed up themselues, and tooke their Bowes and Arrowes and went forth, selling them they went a hunting, and that at their returns they should have Venison enough. Being now gone, one being more ancient and wife then the reft, calling former things to minde, especially the Captaines presence, and the strait charge, that on paine of death none should got a Musket-shot from the Piantation; and comparing this sudden departure of theirs therewith, began to dislike and with himfelfe at home againe, which was further of then divers other dwelt . Hereupon he moued his fellowes to returne, but could not perfwade them : fo there being none but women left, and the other that was turned Sauage, about midnight came away, forfaking the paths left 20 he should be purfued, and by this meanes faued his life.

Captaine Standift tooke the one halfe of his men, and one or two of Master Westons, and Hobbamock, still tecking to make spoyle of them and theirs. At length they espied a file of Indians which made towards them amayne, and there being a small advantage in the ground by reason of a Hill neere them, both Companies ftroue for it. Captain Standalb got it, whereupon they retreated and tooke each man his Tree, letting flie their Arrowes amayne, especially at himselfe and Hobbemocke, whereupon Hobbamocke calt off his coate, and being a knowne Pinefe, (theirs being now killed) chased them so fast, as our people were not able to hold way with him, insomuch as our men could have but one certaine marke, and then but the arme and halte face of a notable villaine as hee drew at Captaine Standish, who together with another both discharged at him, and 30 brike his arme ; whereupon they fled into a swampe, when they were in the thicket they para lied, but to small purpose, getting nothing but toule language. So our Captain dared the Saching to come out and fight like a man, thewing how base and womanlike hee was in tounging it as he did : but he refused and fled. So the Captaine returned to the Plantation, where hee released the women and would not take their Beauer coates from them, nor suffer tholeast discourtesse to bee offered them. Now were Master Westons people resoluted to leave their Plantation and goe for Manbiggen, hoping to get passage and returne with the Fishing Ships. The Captaine told them. that for his owne part hee durit there line with fewer men then they were , yet fince they were otherwayes minded, according to his order from the Gouernours and people of Plimonth, hee would helpe them with Corne competent for their prouision by the way, which hee did, scarce 40 leaving himfelfe more then brought them home. Some of them difliked the choice of the bodie togoe to Munbiggen, and therefore desiring to goe with him to Plumouth, hee tooke them into the Shallop : and feeing them fet fayle and cleere of the Maffachufet Bay, he tooke leave and returned to Plimouth, whither hee came in fafetie (bleffed be God) and brought the head of Witna

Among ft the reft, there was an Indian youth that was ever of a courteous and louing disposition on towards vs, hee not withflanding the death of his Countrimen, came to the Captaine without fea: e, laying, His good conscience and love towards vs imboldned him so to doe. This youth confeffed that the Indians intended to kil Master Westons people, and not to delay any longer then till they had two more Canoes or Boats, which Malter Westons men would have finished by this 50 time (having made them three already) had not the Captaine prevented them, and the end of flay for those Boats, was to take their Ship therewith. Now was the Captaine returned and received with ioy, the head being brought to the Fore and there fet up, the Gouernours and Captaines with divers others went up the same further, to examine the priloner, who looked pittioully on the head, being asked whether he knew it, he anfwered, yea : Then he confessed the plot, and that all the people prouoked Obtakest their Sachim thereunto, being drawne to it by their importunitie : Fine there were (he faid) that profecuted it with more eagernesse then the rest, the two principall were killed, being Peckinot and Wanwamat, whose head was there, the other three were Powabs, being yet living, and knowne vnto ys, though one of them was wounded, as aforesaid. For himselie hee would not acknowledge that hee had any hand therein , begging earnestly for his life, faying, Hee was not a Maffachufet man, but as a stranger lived with them. Hobbamock also gave a good report of him, and belought for him, but was bribed to to doe it. Neuertheleffe, that wee might frew mercy as well as extreamitie, the Gouernour released him, and the rather because we defired he might carry a message to Obraveff his Mafter. No fooner were the Irons from his legs, but he would have beene gone, but the Gouernour bid him stay and feare not, for hee should receive no hurt, and by Hobbamoch commanded him to deliver his meffage to his Malter ; That for our parts, it never entred into our hearts to take such a course with them, till their owne treachery enforced us thereunto, and therefore they much totake fueb a courie with them, thillier i more treasour; enjure cu a successio, ama torrigare they magist thanke them feliues for their ownse oversthrow, yet fince the bad begun; if against by any the tike cour fishes dad prouche but, his Country floudd not bald him, for her would neuer fulfre him or his to refin prace, till bee had viterly confumed them, and therefore should take this as a marning. Earther, that helpoolid fend to Patuxet the three Englishmen hee had and not kill them; also that bee should not spoile the Pele and Houses at Wichaguscusset, and that this Messenger should either bring the English, or an answer or both, pro nifing his fafe returne.

This message was delivered, and the partie would have returned with answer, but was at first to diffwaded by them, whom afterward they would, but could not perswade to come to vs. At length (though long) a woman came and told vs that Obtakieft was forry that the English were killed before he heard from the Gouernour, otherwise hee would have sent them. Also shee said: hee would faine make his peace againe with vs , but none of his men durst come to treate about it, having forfaken his dwelling, and daily removed from place to place, expecting when wee would take further vengeance on him.

Concerning those other people that intended to joyne with the Massachuseuchs against ve though we never went against any of them, yet this fudden and vnexpected execution together with the iuft judgement of God vpon their guiltie consciences, hath so terrified and amazed them, as in like manner they for fooke their houses, running to and fro like men distracted, living 20 in fwamps and other defert places, and to brought manifold diteates among it themselves, whereof very many are dead, as Canacum the Sachim of Manomet, Afpines the Sachim of Naufet, and lanough Sachins of Mattachnest. This Sachins in his life, in the middeft of these diffractions, faid. The God of the English was offended with them, and would destroy them in his anger; and certainly it is ftrange to heare how many of late haue, and full daily dye amongft them, neither is there any likelihood it will eafily ceafe, because through feare they fer little or no Corne, which is the flatte of life, and without which they cannot long preferue health and ilrength. From one of these places a Boat was fent with Prefents to the Gouernour, hoping thereby to worke their peace, but the Boat was cast away, and three of the perions drowned, not farre from our Plantation, onely one escaped, who durft not come to vs, but returned, fo as none of them dare come 20 among it vs.

The moneth of April being now come, on all hands we began to prepare for Corne. And because there was no Corne left before this time, saue that was preserved for Seed, being also hopeleffe of reliefe by fupply, we thought best to leave off all other workes and projecute that as most necessarie. And because there was no small hope of doing good, in that common course of labour that formerly wee were in, for that the Governours that followed men to their labours, had nothing to sine men for their necessities, and therefore could not so we'll exercise that command ouer them therein as formerly they had done, especially confidering that selfe-loue wherewith euery man (in a meature more or leffe) loueth and preferreth his owne good before his neighbours, and also the base disposition of some drones, that as at other times so now especially would be at most burdenous to the rest : It was therefore thought best that every man should vie the best diligence he could for his owne preferuation, both in respect of the time present, and to prepare his owne Corne for the veere following: and bring in a competent portion for the maintenance of publike Officers, Fishermen, &c, which could not bee freed from their calling without greater inconveniences. This course was to continue till harvest, and then the Governours to gather in the appointed portion, for the maintenance of themselves and such others as necessicie constrained to exempt from this condition.

In the middest of Aprill webegan to set, the weather being then seasonable, which much incouraged vs, giving vs good hopes of after plentie : the fetting feafon is good till the latter end of May. But it pleafed God for our further chastifement, to fend a great drought, infomuch, as in fix 50 Great drought weekes after the later fetting there scarce fell any raine, so that the stalke of that was first fet, began to fend forth the eare before it came to halfe growth, and that which was later, not like to yeeld any at all, both blade and stalke hanging the head, and changing the colour in such manner as we indged it veterly dead : our Beanes also ran not vp according to their wonted manner, but flood at a flay, many being parched away, as though they had beene feorched before the fire. Now were our hopes ouerthrowne, and we discouraged, our joy being turned into mourning. To adde also to this forrowfull estate in which we were, we heard of a supply that was sent vnto vs many moneths fince, which having two repulses before, was a third time in company of another Ship three hundred Leagues at Sea, and now in three moneths time heard no further of her, onely the fignes of a wrack were feene on the Coast, which could not be judged to be any other then 60

> These & the like considerations, moved not only every good man privately to enter into examination with his own estate between God and his conscience, & so to humiliation before him but also more folemnly to humble our selnes together before the Lord by Fasting and Prayer. To that end a day was appointed by publike authority, and let a part from all other emploiments, hoping Publike Faft, that the fame God which had ftirred vs vp hereunto, would be moued hereby in mercy to looke woon vs & grant the request of our dejected soules, it our continuance there might any way stand with his glorie and our good. But oh the mercy of our God! Who was as readie to heare as we to aske : For though in the morning when wee offembled together , the heavens were as cleere and the drought as like to continue as euer it was : yet (our exercise continuing some eight or nine Gracious houres) before our departure the weather was overcast, the clouds gathered together on all sides, dewes. and on the next morning diffilled fuch loft, fweete, and moderate showers of raine, continuing fome fourteene daies, and mixed with such seasonable weather, as it was hard to say whether to our withered Corne, or drouping affections were most quickned or reujued. Such was the bountie and goodnesse of our God. Of this the Indians by meanes of Hobbamock tooke notice : who being then in the Towne, and this exercise in the midft of the weeke, said, It was but three daies fince Sunday, and therefore demanded of a boy what was the reason thereof? Which when hee knew and law what effects followed thereupon, hee and all them admired the goodnesse of our God towards vs, that wrought to great a change in to thort a time, the wing the difference be- Indiant conititweene their Conjuration, and our Inuocation on the Name of God for raine; theirs being mixed ration. with fuck stormes and tempests, as sometimes in stead of doing them good, it laieth the Corne flat on the ground, to their prejudice : but ours in fo gentle and feafonable a manner, as they never observed the like.

At the same time Captaine Standish, being formerly imployed by the Gouernour, to buy prouifions for the refreshing of the Colony, returned with the fame, accompanied with on M. Danid M. Temfar a Tomfon, a Scotchman, who also that Spring began a Plantation twentie fine leagues North-east Scothis Planfrom vs. neere Smiths lies, at a place called Pascatoquack, where hee liketh well. Now also tation. heard wee of the third repulie that our supply had, of their safe, though dangerous returne into England, and of their preparation to come to vs. So that having these many fignes of Gods favour and acceptation, wer thought it would bee great ingratitude, it fecretly wee should smoother vp the lame, or content our selves with primate thanks-giving, for that which by private praier could Day of thanks not be obtained. And therefore another folemne day was fet apart for that end wherein wee returned glory, honour, and praise, with all thankfulnese to our good God, which dealt so graciously 30 with vs. whose name for these and all other his mercies towards his Church and chosen ones, by them be bleffed and praifed now and euermore, Amen.

In the latter end of July, and the beginning of August, came two Ships with supply vnto vs, Two Ships, who brought all their pailengers, except one, in health, who recourred in fibrt time, who also not-withstanding all our wants and hardship (blessed be God) found not any one sick person amongst vs at the Plantation. The bigger Ship called the Anne was hired, and there againe fraughted backe, from whence wee fet faile the tenth of September. The leffer called the little James, was built for the Company at their charge. Shee was now also fitted for Trade and discouery to the Southward of Cape Cod, and almost readie to fet faile, whom I pray God to bleffe in her good and lawfull proceedings.

Few things I thought meete to adde heereunto, which I have observed amongst the

A Indians, both touching their Religion, and fundry other Customes amongst them. And first, whereas my felfe and others, in former Letters (which came to the Presse against my Their Relicion will and knowledge) wrote, that the Indians about vs are a people without any Religion or The meaning knowledge of any God, therein I erred, though wee could then gather no better : For as they of the word, conceine of many divine powers, so of one whom they call Kiehran, to bee the principall maker Wehran, I conceine of many disinte powers, too one without they car knows, to be the principle in that think hish re-of all the reft, and to be made by none: Hee (they fay) created the Heauens, Earth, Sea, and all think hish re-ofference on a single powers. The contraction of the contraction of whom they and disputs for-centures contained therein. Also that hee made one man and one woman, of whom they and disputs forwee and all mankind came : but how they became to farre differfed that know they not. At first chife is an old 50 they fay, there was no Sachim, or King, but Kiehtan, who dwelleth about the Heauens, whither min, and Kithall good men goe when they die to fee their friends, and have their fill of all things. This his har there exec bitation lyeth Westward in the Heavens, they say; thither the bad men goe also, and knocke at de hin acc. his doore, but he bids them Quachet, that is to lay, Walke abroad, for there is no place for fuch; fo tie malediffi. that they wander in relileffe want and penury. Neuer man faw this Kiebran; onely old men tell them of him, and bid them tell their children, yea, to charge them to teach their posterities the fame, and lay the like charge vpon them. This power they acknowledge to be good, and when they would obtaine any great matter, meet together, and cry vnto him, and so likewise for plentie, victory, &c. ling, dance, feast, give thankes, and hang vp Garlands and other things in memo-

60 ry of the fame. Another power they worthip, whom they call Hobbamock, and to the Nothward of vs Hob- Their Devillbamoqui; this as farre as wee can conceiue is the Deuili, him they call upon to cure their wounds and diseases. When they are curable, hee perswades them hee sends the same for some conceined angeragainst them, but vpon their calling vpon him can and doth helpe them; But when they are mortall, and not curable in nature, then he perfiwades them Kiebtan is angry and fends them whom none can cure : infomuch , as in that respect onely they somewhat doubt whether hee bee fimply good, and therefore in ficknesse neuer call vpon him. This Hobbomock appeares in lundry formes vnto them, as in the shape of a Man, a Deare, a Fawne, an Eagle, &c. but most ordinarily a Snake : Hee appeares not to all, but the chiefest and most judicious amongst them, though allof them striue to accaine to that hellish height of Honour. He appeareth most ordinary, and is most convertant with three forts of people, one I confesse, I neither know by name nor office directly: Of these they have sew but esteeme highly of them, and thinke that no weapon can kill them: another they call by the name of Powab, and the third Pniefe.

The office and dutie of the Powab is to be exercifed principally in calling vpon the Deuill. and curing difeales of the licke or wounded. The common people joyne with him in the exercise of Ia Innocation, but doe but onely affent, or as we terme it, fry Amen to that he faith, yet fometime breake out into a short musicall note with him. The Powab is eager and free in speech, fierce in countenance, and ioyneth many antick and laborious gestures with the same ouer the partie diseased. If the partie be wounded, he will also seeme to sucke the wound, but if they bee curable (as they fay) hee toucheth it not, but a Skooke, that is the Snake, or Wohlacuck, that is the Eagle fitteth on his shoulder and lickes the same. This none see but the Ponab, who tells them hee doth it himselfe. If the partie be otherwise diseased, it is accounted sufficient if in any shape hee but come into the house, taking it for an vindoubted figne of recouerv.

And as in former ages Apollo had his Temple at Delphos, and Diana at Ephofiu; to have I heard them call youn some, as if they had their residence in some certaine places or because they appea- 20 red in those formes in the same. In the Powahs speech hee promiseth to sacrifice many skinnes of Beailts, Kettles, Hatchets, Beades, Knines, and other the beit things they have to the fiend, if hee will come to helpe the partie diseased : But whether they performe it I know not. The other practiles I have feene, being necessarily called at some times to be with their ficke, and have vied the best arguments I could make them understand against the same : They have told me I should fee the Devill at those times come to the party, but I affured my selfe and them of the contrary, which fo proued : yea, themtelues have confessed they never faw him when any of vs were prefent. In desperate and extraordinary hard trauell in childe-birth, when the partie cannot be delivered by the ordinary meanes, they fend for this Powab, though ordinarily their travell is not fo extreame as in our parcs of the world, they being of a more hardie nature ; for on the third day 30 after childe-birth, I haue feene the mother with the Infant, vpon a fmall occasion in cold weather in a Boat vpon the Sea. Many facrifices the Indians vie, and in some cases kill children. It seemeth they are various in their religious worship in a little distance, and grow more and more cold in their worship to Kiehtan ; laying, In their memory he was much more called vpon. The Nanohigganfets exceed in their blind denotion, and have a great spatious house wherein onely some few (that are as wee may tearme them Priests) come : thither at certaine knowne times resort all their people, and offer almost all the riches they have to their gods, as Kettles, Skins, Hatchets, Beades, Kniues, &c. all which are cast by the Priests into a great fire that they make in the midst of the house, and there consumed to ashes. To this offering euery man bringeth freely, and the more he is knowne 40 to bring, hath the better esteeme of all men. This the other Indian; about vs approue of as good, Burnt offring, and with their Sachims would appoint the like : and because the plague hath not raigned at Nakeeps his fernobigganfet, as at other places about them, they attibute to this custome there vied.

uants poorc. The Panieses are men of great courage and wisedome, and to these also the Deuill appeareth Priese valou more familiarly then to others, and as wee conceine maketh conenant with them to preferve them from death, by wounds with Arrowes, Kniues, Hatchets, &c. or at least both themselues and especially the people thinke themselves to be freed from the same. And though against their battels, all of them by painting disfigure themselves, yet they are knowne by their courage and boldnesse, by reason whereof one of them will chase almost an hundred men, for they account it death for whomsoeuer stand in their way. These are highly esteemed of all forts of people, and 50 are of the Sachims Councell, without whom they will not warre or undertake any weightie bufineffe. In warre their Sachims, for their more fafetie goe in the mieft of them. They are commonly men of greatest stature and strength, and such as will endure most hardnesse, and yet are more discreet, courteous, and humane in their carriages then any amongst them, scorning theft, lying, and the like base dealings, and stand as much whon their reputation as any men. And to the end they may have flore of these, they traine up the most forward and likeliest boyes from their child-hood in great hardnesse, and make them abitaine from daintie meat, obseruing divers orders prescribed, to the end that when they are of age the Deuill may appeare to them, cauling to drinke the juyce of Sentry and other bitter Hearbs till they cast, which they must disgorge into the platter, and drinke againe, and againe, till at length, through extraordinary prelling of nature 60 it will feeme to bee all bloud, and this the boyes will doe with eagerneffe at the first, and fo continue, till by reason of faintnesse they can scarce stand on their legs, and then must goe forth into the cold; also they beat their shins with sticks, and cause them to run through bushes, stumps, and brambles, to make them hardy and acceptable to the Deuill, that in time he may appeare vnto ledge and approbation, yet to be commanded by the greater as occasion ferueth. Of this fore is Malfallowas our friend, and Conanacus of Nanobiggenfet our supposed enemy. Every Sachim taketh care for the widdow and fatherlette, also for such as are aged, and any way maymed, if their friends be dead, or not able to prouide for them. A Saobim will not take any to wife, but such an one as is equall to him in birth, other wife they fay their feede would in time become ignoble, and though they have many other wives, yet are they no other then concubines or fervants, and yeeld a kind of obedience to the principall, who ordereth the family, and them in it. The to like their men observe also , and will adhere to the first during their lives ; but put away the other at their pleasure. This Gouernment is successue and not by choyce. If the father dye before the some ordaughter bee of age, then the thilde is committed to the protection and tuition of tome one amongst them, who ruleth in his stead till hee be of age, but when that is I know not.

Every Sachim knoweth how farre the bounds and limits of his owne Countrey extendeth. and that is his owne proper inheritance, out or that if any of his men delire land to fet their Corne, hee giueth them as much as they can vie, and fets them in their bounds. In this circuit winofoeuer hunteth, if any kill any venifon, bring him his fee, which is foure parts of the same, if it bee killed on the Land, but if in the water, then the skin thereof: The Great 20 Saebims or Kings know not their owne bounds or limits of land, as well as the reft. All Tranellers or Strangers for the most part lodge at the Sachims, when they come, they tell them how long they will itay, and to what place they goe, during which time they receive entertainment according to their persons, but went not. Once a yeere the Puisses vie to prouoke the people to Tributed bestow much Corne on the Sachim. To that end they appoint a certaine time and place neere the Sachims dwelling, where the people bring many baskets of Corne, and make a great flack thereof. There the Pniefes stand ready to give thankes to the people on the Sachuns behalfe, and after acquainteth the Sachim therewith, who fetcheth the same, and is no leffe thankfull, bestowing many gifts on them. When any are vilited with sicknesse, their friends refort wnto them for their comfort, and con-30 tinue with them oftentimes till their death or recourry. But if they recouer then because their sicknesse was chargeable, they fend Corne and other gifts vnto them at a certaine appointed time, whereat they fealt and dance, which they call Commoco.

When they bury the dead, they fowe up the corps in a mat and fo put it in the earth. If the par- Burialla tie be a Sachim, they couer him with many curious mats, and bury all his riches with him, and inclose the grave with a pale. If it bee a childe, the father will also put his owne most speciall 40 Iewels and Ornaments in the earth with it, allo he will cut his haire and disfigure himselfe very much in token of forrow. If it bee the man or woman of the house, they will pull downe the mats and leave the framestanding, and bury them in or neere the same, and either remove their dwelling, or give ouer house-keeping. The men imploy themselues wholly in hunting, and other exercises of the Bow, except at fome times they take some paine in fishing. The women line a most slauish life, they carry all Womens slav their burdens, let and dreffe their Corne, gather it in, and feeke out for much of their food, beate ucry. and make readie the Corne to eate, and have all houshold care lying upon them. The younger fort reuerence the elder, and doe all meane offices whilft they are together, although they be strangers. Boyes and girles may not weare their haire like men and women, but

If a woman haue a bad husband, or cannot affect him, and there 60 bee warre or opposition betweene that and any other people, shee will runne away from him to the contrary partie and there line, where they never come vinwelcome : for where are most women, there is greatest plentie. When a woman hath her monethly termes, shee separateth her felfe from all other company, and liueth certaine dayes in a house alone : after which she watheth her felfe and all that thee hath touched or vied, and is againe received to her husbands bed or

Murther.

In matters of valuel and dishonest dealing the Sachim examineth and punisheth the same. In cale of thefts, for the first offence hee is difgracefully rebuked, for the second beaten by the Sachim with a cadgell on the naked backe, for the third hee is beaten with many ftroakes and bath his nose shit vo ward, that thereby all men may both know and shun him. If any man kill another, hee muit like wife die for the same. The Sachim not onely paffeth the sentence vpon malefactors. but executesh the same with his owne hands, if the partie bee then present; if not, senderh his but executeth the lame with its owner halos, and performe the fame. But if the offender bee owne knife in cale of death; in the hands of others to performe the fame. But if the offender bee to receive other punishment, hee will not receive the same but from the Sachim himselfe, before whom being naked he kneeleth, and will not offer to runne away though hee beat him neuer fo much it being a greater disparagement for a man to cry during the time of his correction, then

As for their apparell, they weare breeches and stockings in one, like some Irish, which is made of Deere skinnes, and haue shooes of the same leather. They weare also a Deeres skinne loose about them like a cloake, which they will turne to the weather fide. In this habite they travell. but when they are at home, or come to their journeyes end, prefently they pull of their breeches. flockings, and shooes, wring out the water, if they bee wet, and drie them, and rub or chafe the fame. Though these be off, yet haue they another small garment that couereth their secrets. The men weare also when they goe abroad in cold weather, an Otter or Fox skin on their right arme. but onely their bracer on the left. Women and all of that fex weare ftrings about their legs, which the men neuer doe.

Wittie people.

The people are very ingenious and observative, they keepe account of time by the Moone, and Winters or Summers; they know divers of the Starres by name, in particular, they know the North-ftar, and call it Maske, which is to tay, The Beare. Also they have many names for the Winds. They will gueffe very well at the wind and weather before hand, by observations in the Heauens, They report also, that some of them can cause the wind to blow in what part they lift, can raife fformes and tempetts, which they vitally doe when they intend the death or defruction of other people, that by reason of the vnseasonable weather, they may take aduantage 30 of their enemies in their houles. At such times they performe their greatest exployts, and in fuch featons when they are at enmittie with any, they keepe more carefull watch then at

Language.

As for the language it is verie copious, large, and difficult, as yet wee cannot attaine to any great measure thereof; but can understand them, and explaine our selues to their understanding, by the helpe of those that daily converse with vs. And though there be difference in an hundred miles distant of place, both in language and manners, yet not so much but that they very well vnderstand each other. And thus much of their lives and manners.

Regifters,

In itead of Records and Chronicles, they take this course, where any remarkeable act is done, in memory of it, either in the place, or by some pathway neere adioyning, they make a round 40 hole in the ground about a foot deepe, and as much ouer, which when others passing by behold, they enquire the cause and occasion of the same, which being once knowne, they are carefull to acquaint all men as occasion serueth therewith. And least such holes should bee filled, or growne vp by any accident, as men paffe by they will oft renew the fame : By which meanes many things of great Antiquitie are fresh in memory. So that as a man trauelleth, if hee can understand his guide, nis iourney will be the leffe tedious, by reason of many historicall Discourses will be re-For that Continent, on which wee are called New-England, although it hath ever beene con-

The Country,

ceiued by the English, to bee a part of the maine Land adioyning to Virginia, yet by relation of the Indians it should appeare to bee otherwise : for they affirme confidently , that it is an Iland, 50 and that either the Dutch or French paffe thorow from Sea to Sea, betweene vs and Virginia, and driue a great Trade in the same. The name of that Inlet of the Sea, they call Mobegon, which I take to be the same which wee call Hadsons River, vp which Master Hudson went many leagues, and for want of meanes (as I heare) left it undifcouered. For confirmation of this, their opinion is thus much ; Though Virginia bee not aboue an hundred and fifcie leagues from vs, yet they never heard of Powhatan, or knew that any Englifb were planted in his Countrey, face onely by vs and Tifquantum, who went into an English Ship thither : And therefore it is the more probable, becaute the water is not passable for them, who are very aduenturous in

New England

Then for the temperature of the ayre, in almost three yeeres experience, I can scarce diffin- 60 guish New England from Old England, in respect of heate, and cold, frost, inow, raine, winds, &c. Some obiect, because our Plantation lieth in the latitude of two and fortie, it mult needes bee much botter. I confesse I cannot give the reason of the contrary; onely experience teacheth vs, that it it doe exceed England, it is fo little as must require better judgements to discerne it. And for the Winter, I rather thinke (if there be difference) it is both sharper and longer in New Engl lind then Old; and yet the want of those comforts in the one which I have enjoyed in the other. my deceine my indgement also. But in my best observation, comparing our owne conditions with the Relations of other parts of America, I cannot conceine of any to agree better with the constitution of the English, not being oppressed with extremitie of heat, nor nipped with biting cold, by which meanes, bleffed be God, wee enioy our health, notwithflanding those difficulties wee haue vndergone, in such a measure as would haue been admired if we had lived in Eneland with the like meanes. The day is two houres longer then here, when it is at the shorreft, and as much shorter when it is at the longest.

The loyle is variable, in some places Mould, in some Clay, and others a mixed Sand, &c. The Soyle. chiefelt graine is the Indian Mays, or Ginny-Wheat; the feed-time beginneth in the midft of A- Corne pril, and continueth good till the midft of May. Our Harvest beginneth with September. This Corne increaseth in great measure, but is inferiour in quantitie to the same in Virginia, the reason

I conceive, is because Virginia is farre hotter then it is with vs, it requiring great heat to ripen; but whereas it is obiected against New England, that Corne will not there grow, except the ground bee manured with Fish : I answere , That where men fet with Fish (as with vs) it is more easie so to doe, then to cleere ground and set without some fine or fixe yeeres, and so begin anew, as in Virginia and ellewhere. Not but that in some places, where they cannot be taken with eafe in such abundance, the Indians set foure yeeres together without, and haue as good 20 Corne or better then we have that fet with them , though indeed I thinke if wee had Cattell to till the ground, it would be more profitable and better agreeable to the foyle, to fowe Wheat, Ry, Barley, Peafe, and Oats, then to fet Mays, which our Indians call Emachine: for we have had experience that they like and thrine well; and the other will not bee procured without good labour and diligence, especially at seed-time, when it must also bee watched by night to keepe the Wolves from the Fish, till it be rotten, which will beein foureteene dayes; yet men agreeing together, and taking their turnes it is not much.

Much might bee spoken of the benefit that may come to such as shall here plant by Trade with the Indians for Furres, if men take a right course for obtaining the same ; for I dare presume upon that small experience I have had, to affirme, that the English, Dutch, and 30 French, returne yeerely many thousand pounds profits by Trade onely from that Iland, on which wee are leated.

Tobacco may bee there planted but not with that profit as in some other places, neither were it profitable there to follow it, though the increase were equall, because Fish is a better and richer Commoditie, and more necessary, which may be, and there are had in as great abundance as in any other part of the world ; Witnesse the West-countrey Merchants of England, which returne incredible gaines veerely from chence. And if they can fo doe which here buy their falt at a great charge, and transport more Company to make their voyage, then will faile their Ships, what may the Planters expect when once they are feated, and make the most of their Salt there, and imploy themselves at left eight moneths in fishing, whereas the other fish but foure, and have 40 their Ship lie dead in the Harbour all the time, whereas fuch shipping as belong to Plantations may takefraight of Pallengers or Cattle thither, and have their lading provided against they come. I confeile we have come fo far thort of the meanes to raife fuch returns, as with great difficultie wee haue preferued our liues; insomuch as when I looke backe vpon our condition, and weake meanes to preserve the same, I rather admire at Gods mercies and providence in our prefernation, then that no greater things have beene effected by vs. But though our beginning have beene thus raw, small, and difficult, as thou hast feene, yet the same God that hath hitherto led vs thorow the former, I hope w.ll raife meanes to accomplish the latter.

The next day they refolued to coast alongst to discouer the next Harbour, which was but two leagues distant from the other, where they found a more pleasant River, being foure fathom water at a low water, with Meadowes on both fides thereof, having Roles and Lillies growing thereon as the other had. They found within this River a very fit place for a Plantation , both in regard that it was naturally apt to bee fortified, and that all the ground beweene the two Plantation. They found like wife in enery River abundance of Lobsters, and Cockles, and other small files, and also they found not onely in the Rivers, but all the Coast alongst, numbers of severall forts of Wild-fowle, as Wild-goofe, Black-Duck, Woodcock, Herron, Pigeon, and many other forts of Fowle which they knew nor. They found likewife, as they failed alongst the Coastabun-

The Countrey is full of Woods, not very thick, and the most part Oake, the rest Fir-tree, Spruce, Birch, and many other forts of wood 40 which they had not feene before. Having discovered this part of the Countrey in regard of the voyage, their Ship was to make to the Straits with fifthes, they resolved to coast alongst from Lukes Bay to Port de Muson, being foure leagues to the East thereof, where they encountred with a Frenchman, that in a very short time had a great voyage, having furnished one Ship away with fishes, and had neere fo many ready as to load his owne Ship and others. And haung taken a view of this Port, which to their judgement they found no wayes inferiour to the rest they had seene before, they resolved to retire backe to New-found-land, where their Ship was to receive her loading of fishes, the twentieth of July they loofed from thence, and the leven and twentieth thereof they arrived at Saint Iohns Harbour in New-found land; and from thence failed along (t the Bay of Conception, where they left the Ship, and dispatched themselves home in severall Ships that belonged to the Welt part of England, and doe intend this next Spring to fet forth a Colony to plant there.

The description of the Countrey of Mawooshen, discourred by the English, Amooshen is a Countrey lying to the North and by East of Virginia, betweene the degrees quantitie. Mooghes is a Countrey lying to the North and by Eart of Organia, between the digites quantitie.

1 of 43, and 45. It is fortie leagues broad, and fiftie in length, lying in breadth Eaft and West, Tandminerare 60 and in length North and South. It is bordered on the East fide with a Countrey, the people, faid to be the whereof they call Tarrantines : on the West with Epistoman, on the North with a great Wood called Senaglecoune, and on the South with the mayne Ocean Sea, and many Ilands.

In Maroofben it feemeth there are nine Rivers , whereof the first to the East is called Quibi- Quiequeffor quession; on which there is one Towne, wherein dwell two Sagamos or Lords, the one called A. Riner.

The next is Pemagnid, a goodly River and very commodious all things confidered; it is ten fa-Printered river thoms water at the entrance, and fortie miles vp there are two fathoms and a halfe at low water: it is halfe a mile broad, and runneth into the Land North many daies journey : where is a great Lake of 18, leagues long and foure broad. In this Lake are feuen great Ilands : toward the fartheft end there falleen in a River, which they call Acasonflowed, where they paffe with their Boates there falled in a Rulet, which they goe over Land twentie daies journey more, and then come to another River, where they have a trade with Anadabis or Anadabigen, with whom the Frenchmen have had commerce for a long time. Neere to the North of this River of Pemanuid are three Townes : the first is Opfegon, where Bafbabes their chiefe Lord doth dwell. And in this Towns are fixtie houles, and 250. men, it is three daies journey within the Land. The second is Caiocame: the third Shalbeokeing. These two last Townes are opposite one to the other, the River dividing them both, and they are two daies journey from the Towne of Balhabes. In Caiscane dwelleth Maielquis, and in Shafheokeing Bomant, two Sagames, lubiects to Bashabes. Vpon both fides of this River vp to the very Lake, for a good distance the ground is plaine, without Trees or Bulhes, but full of long Graffe, like vnto a pleasant meadow, which the Inhabitants doe burne once a veere to have fresh feed for their Deere. Beyond this Meadow are great Woods, whereof more shall bee spoken hereaster. The River of Pemaqued is four dayes sourney from the mouth

Ramalloc.

The third River is called Ramaffor, and is distant from the mouth of Pemaguid foure daies iourney; it is twentie fathoms at the entrance, and hath a mile ouer; it runneth into the Land three daies journey, and within lelle then a daies journey of the dwelling of Balbabes : vpon this River there is a Towne named Panobseat, the Lord whereof is called Sibatabood; who hath in his Town fiftie houses, and eightie men.

The fourth River Apanamapeske, lying West and by South of Ramassoc, at the entrance whereof there is twentie fathoms water, and it is a mile broad : it runneth vp into the Countrey five daies journey; and within three daies of the mouth are two Townes, the one called Mes- 30 combe, where dwelieth Aramasoga, who hath in his Towne fiftie houses, and eightie men. The other is Chebeenadole, whole Lord is Skanke, and hath thirtie houles and ninetie men. The mouth of Apanawapeske is diltant from Ramaffor three daies iourney.

Apanmen ek. A Lake.

To the South-west foure daies journey, there is another excellent River; in the entrance whereof is twentie rathoms water, and it is a quarter of a mile broad, it runneth into the Land two daies journey, and then there is a greatfall; at the head wherof there is a Lake of a daies journey long and as much in breadth. On the fide of this Lake there is a Strait, and at the end of that Strait there is another Lake of foure daies journey long, and two daies journey broad; wherin there are two llands, one at the one end, and another at the other end. I should have told you that both thefe Lakes, as also the rest formerly spoken of, doe infinitely abound with fresh wa- 40 ter fish of all forts, as also with divers forts of Creatures, as Otters, Beeves, sweete Rats, and

The fixt River is called Apponick, on which there are three Townes; the first is called Appifram, where dwelleth Abochigiftic. The second is Mesaqueegamic, where dwelleth Amniquin, in which there is seuentie houles and eightie men ; the third is Matamusiscoute, in which are eightie houles and ninetie men, and there dwelleth Narracommique.

Aponeg.

To the Weltward of this there is another River called Aponeg : it hath at the entrance ten fathoms water, and is a mile broad : it runneth vp into a great Sound of fresh water. Vpon the East fide of this River there are two Townes, the one called Nebamocago, the other called Asshawe. In the first dwelleth Mentaurmet, and hath in his Towne 160, housholds, and some 300, men. In 50 the second dwelleth Hamerbaw, and hath in his Towne eightie housholds and seuentie men. On the West side there is another Towne called Neredosban, where are 120. housholds, and 100.

men. There is a Sagamo or Lord called Sabenaw. Three daies iourney from Aponeg to the Westward, there is a goodly River called Sagadoboc: the entrance whereof is a mile and an halfe ouer, holding that breadth a daies journey, and then it maketh a great Sound of three daies journey broad : in which Sound are fix llands, foure great and full of Woods, and two leffe without Woods : The greater are called Somaehcoc, Neguino, Neimoc. And in the verie entrance of this River there is another small Hand : from the West of which land to the Maine, there is a Sand that maketh as it were a bar, fo that that way is not paffable for fhipping : but to the Eaftward there is two fathoms water. This Sound divideth it 60 felfe into two branches or armes, the one running North-east twentie foure daies journey, the other North-west thirtie daies journey into the Maine: At the heads whereof there are two Lakes, the Westermost being eight daies journey long, and foure daies journey broad; and the EasterCHAP. 6. Vpon this arme there is one ouer fall, which standeth halfea daies iourney aboue this branch : vpon this arme there are foure Townes: The first is called Kenebeke, which hath eightie houses, and one Kenebeke handred men. The Lord whereof is Apombamen. The second is Ketangheamicke, and the Sacomes name is Ottowerthe, who hath in his Towne ninetie housholds, and three hundred and thirtie men. This Towne is foure dayes iourney from Kenebeke, and eight dayes iourney

To the Northward is the third Towne, which they call Naragooc ; where there are fifcie houlholds, and one hundred and fiftie men. The chiefe Sagamo of that place is Cococbehamas. And on the small branch that runneth East standeth the fourth Towne, named by M flatiga ; where there are but eight housholds , and fortie men. Vpon the Northwest branch of this Sound stand two Townes more : The first is called Amereangan, and is diflant from Kenebete fixe dayes journey. In this place are ninetie housholdes, and two hundred and fixtie men, with two Sagamoes ; the one called Safuea, the other Scamas. Seuen daies journey hence there is another Sagemo, whole name is Olloworskin, and his Townes name Namercante, wherein are fortie housholds, and one hundred and twentie men. A dayes journey aboue Namercante there is a downefall, where they cannot passe with their Cannoes, 30 but are inforced to carrie themby Land for the space of a quarter of a mile, and then they put them into the River againe: And twelve dayes journey above this Downfall there is another, where they carrie their Boates as at the first ; and fixe dayes journey more to the North is the head of this River, where is the Lake that is of eight dayes journey long, and foure dayes broad before mentioned. In this Lake there is one Iland; and three dayes iourney from this Lake there is a Towne which is called Buccampanecants, wherein are threefcore houlholds, and foure hundred men: And the Sagamo thereof is called Baccaimife. This man and his people are subjects to the Bashabez of Manoshen, and in his Countrey is the farthest limit of his Dominion, where he hath any that doe him homage. To the Westward of Sagadaboc, foure dayes journey there is another River called Ashams-

30 baga, which hath at the entrance fixe fathoms water, and is halfe a quarter of a mile broad: Afternation is runneth into the Land two dayes journey : and on the East fide there is one Towne called Agnagebese, wherein are seuentie houses, and two hundred and fortie men, with two Saga-

mes, the one called Mammet, the other Calherokenit. Seuen dayes iourney to the South-west of Ashamahaga there is another River, that is fixe fathoms to the entrance: This River is named Shawakotoe, and is halfe a myle broad; it run- Shawakotoe neth into the Land fiftie dayes journey : but foure dayes from the entrance it is fo narrow. that the Trees growing on each fide doe so crosse with their boughes and bodies on the other, as it permitteth not any meanes to palle with Boates that way : for which cause the Inhabitants that on any occasion are to trauell to the head, are forced to goe by Land, ta- A Lake foure 40 king their way voon the West side. At the end of this River there is a Lake of source dayes sourcey iourney long, and two dayes broad, wherein are two Ilands. To the North-Well foure daies long & 2. broad iourney from this Lake, at the head of this River Shanakatee there is a small Province, which they call Cretemago, wherein is one Towne. This is the Westermost River of the Dominions of Bas (habez, and Quibiquiffen the Weftermoft.

To the Reader.

Hauethought good to adde to the English Plantations in New England, those in the neighbour Country of New-found-land. This was first discourred, Ann. 1497. by S. Sebastian Cabot Set 50 forth by King Henry the lementh : the Voyages followed of M.Rut, Albert de Prato, M. Hore, and others. Ann. 1583. actuall and formall possession, was taken in the right of Queene Elizabeth of glorious memory, and her Successours, by that memorable Knight, Sir Humtrey Gilbert (fee sup. lib. 4. ca. 13.) And in the yeare, 1609. M. John Guy of Bristoll did write a Treatife to animate the English to plant there, a written Copy whereof I have. A. 1610. It pleased bis most excellent Maiestie to grant a Patens for a Plantation, part whereof (the whole might feeme too long for our purpose) we have inferred.

Master I o HN Gvy his Letter to Master SLANY Treasurer, and to the Counsell of the New-found-land Plantation.

R lebt worlbipfull, it may pleafe you to vuderstand, that it was the tenth day of this memeth of May before the Barke of Northam, called the Consent, arrived here m New-found-land; notwithflanding that a Ship of Briftoll, called the Lioneffe, came to this Country the second of May in a transing tost a Sup of Stritten, cause are Lioneure, came to tost country toe terms of Vosay in a month face; and the Trial of Dattmouth arrivable toe before in fettene departs. Byracife of which Vogage in flag of the dependent Brate, no subside Vogage in the places defined; all being possessed to take any of the places defined; all being possessed to take the places defined; all being possessed to take the places defined. fore, So that the Ship that commeth, whereof as yet there is no newes, is to trust to the place here, which is referred for her; which I hope will prove a good place. Some yeeres as great a Voyage hath bin made here, as in any place in this Land: God send ber hither in safetie. I have not yet seene any of the Counore; to the Southward, or Northward of the Bay of Conception face this firing, because it expected daily the arrival of the Barks, and thought it use fit to be abjent berebuses writil she were arrived, and diffatched : but presently upon her departure, no time, God willing shall be lost, The care that was taken to require generally the Fiftermen to affift vs, and to supply our wants, if any should be, was most logful Fishermens and comfortable to vs, which was most willingly accomplified by the most part of those which I have yet kinde affilian-(cene: yet, God be prased, such was the state of all things with us, as we were in no want of victuals, but ces. bad a oreat remainder, as you hall after understand. The state of the Autumne and Winter was in these parts of New-found-land after this manner. In State of the

both the moneths of Ottober and November, there were fource fix dayes whering either freezed or from- weather in both the moneths of October and November, there were jearce jix cases wernine enter jeach on John Ansumne and ed: and that so little, that presently it was thanked and melted with the strength of the Stringe: All there. Winter, I have fiduc of the afore faid two moneths being both warmer and drier then in England. In December we had by me a write-50 sometimes faire weather, sometimes frost and snow, and sometime open weather and raine : for in the lat- ten ioutnall, ter endit was rainie, and was open weather. All these three moneths the winde was so cartable, as it would declaring the enery fortnight visite all the points of the Compasse.

The most part of lanuary and February unto the middle of March the frost continued : the minde being for the most part Westerly, and now and then Northerly; not with standing three or four times, when 4. Nouember the minde was at South, it began to tham and did raine. That which fell in this feafor was for the most 1610 till the part Snow, which with the beate of the Sunne would be consumed in the open places within a few dayes. Inflot Aprill That which abode longest was in February. During this time many dayes the Sun Cone warme and bright 1(11. but That which about longest was in February. During toutime many ages to some concurrent was a record thought in from morning to night : notwith standing the length of this frosty weather, small brooks that did run alwould seems 60 most in level with a som course, were not the whole winter three nights over frozen so thicke, as that the Ice ted one, the

could be are a Dogge to goe ouer st, which I found by good proofe: for enery morning I went to the brooke ful flance which runneth by our house to wall. The Snow was never aboue engliteene inches thicke generally out of thereof being the drift; fo that the feare of manting wood or water neuer tooke bold of vs: for albeit we made no pronison for them, yet at a minute of an houses warning we were furnified where there were Lakes of frefo wa- Moderate

Reuonle, and Trepatic there is great quantitie of open ground and Stagges. It is most likely that all the Revonte, and a repaired and of England before the returne of this our Barre, which hall not make any Darres min or my composition that nothing frontabe fent bither before the returne of the Shins trous filbing. For as concerning sending of Cattle, it will be best that it be deferred until the next Spring.

from juring. L. Wilthall, in regard of the quantity, we have of it remaining of old, together with that thit is come now, as with the dry fills that here we may be flored with I am in good hope there will not want any to last till this time twelve moneths. And according to the victuals which hall be found at the end of ter that flood fill and did not run, there it remained frozen able to beare a man almost three moneths, and was not dissolved untill the middle of Aprill. But where the agre had entrance and iffue out of them three was no frost. When the winde in the winter time in England is at the North-east one moneth together. the frost is greater, and the cold more sharpe, then it is here at all. There was no moneth in all the winter that some of our company did not travell in, either by land or by water, and lie abroad and drinke water, in places distant two, three, foure and fine leagues from our babitation, and sometimes lay in the woods without fire, and received no barme. When Aprill came our Spring began, and the first that did but was the fmall Relen or the Corinth tree. Our Company was not letted in working abroad, o in the woods and over arre fifteene dayes the wholewinter. We never wanted the company of Rauens and [mail Birds : So that the doubt that have bin made of the extremity of the winter feason in these parts of New-found-land are found by our experience canfelesse; and that not onely men may safely inhabit here without any needs of 19 Stone but Nanigation may be made to and fro from England to thefe parts at any time of the years.

Healthfulnes.

Concerning the bealthfulnesse of these Cour. ries, we bearing him now more then ten moreths upon this Voyage, of nine and thirt; persons, which was all our number which wintered here, there are maring one. ly foure; whereof one Thomas Percy Samper died the elementh of December of thought, brining flaine a man in Rochester : which was the cause, being unknowne unto mee untill a day before be died, that he came this Vorage. And one other, called Iohn Morris Tyler, miscarried the first of February by reason of a brufe. The third, called Mirmaluke Whittington, was never perfectly well after be bad the fmall Poxe, which he brought out of Brittoll with him, who died the fifteenth of February. And the fourth called William Scone, baning at the first onely a stiffenesse in one of his knees, kept his bed ten weekes, and would never store his body, which lasinesse brought him to his end, who died the thirteenth of Aprill. Of 20 the rest foure or fine bane bin sicke, some three moneths, and some foure moneths; who now are better then they were, except one. All of them, if they had had as good will to worke, as they had good flomaches to their victuals, would long fince have bin recovered. One Richard Fletcher, shat is Mafter Pilot bere and a director of the Fishing, reported unto me, that he was one of the company confishing of forty persons, that went in a drumbler of Ipswich, called the Amitie, to the North part of Ireland about eleven recres agoe from London in the late Queenes fernice, under the charge of one Captaine Fleming, and continued there the pace of two yeares: In which time two and thirty died of the Scurnie, and that onely eight of them returned bome whereof the faid Richard Fletcher was one. So that the accident of death or ficknesse of any persons in these our parts of New-found-land is not to argue any unbealthfulness of this Country, 30 no more then Ireland is to be discredited by the losses of those two and thirty men: notwithstanding that there were to be had fresh victuals and many other helpes, which this Country as yet hath not, but in good time may baue.

Imployment

From the fixt of October until the fixteenth of May our Company had bin imployed in making of A Store house to hold our promisions, and a dwelling bouse for our habitation, which was finished about the first of December; with a square inclosure of one hundred and twenty foot long and nintie foot broad, compassing these two houses, and a worke house to worke dry in to make Boates or any other worke out of the raine and three peeces of Ordnance are planted there to command the Harboroughs upon a platforme made of great posts, and railes, and great Poles fixteene foot long fet upright round about with two Flana kers to scoure the quarters. A Boat about tweluc tuns big with a decke is almost similect to faile and row 40 about the headlands: six silving Boates and Pinnesses: a second saw pit at the fresh Lake of two miles in length and the fixt part of a mile broad, standing within twelve score of our habitation, to saw the timber to be had out of the fresh Lake, in keeping two pairs of Sawyers to samplankes for the Said buildings, in ridding of some grounds to sow Corne and garden seedes: in cutting of wood for the Collier, in coling of it: in working at the Smiths Forge Iron workes for all needfull vies : in costing both by Land and Sea to many places within this Bay of Conception: in making the frame of timber of a farre greater and fairer boufe, then that which as yet we dwell in, which is almost finished, and divers other things. We have fewed En Life Corne, all forts of graine this Spring, which profper well bitherio. Our Goates have lived here all this winter; and there is one lustic Kidde, which was yeared in the dead of winter. Our Swice profeer. Pidgens and Conies will endure exceeding well. Our Poultrie have not onely laied Egges plentifully but there are eigh- 50 scene yong Chickins, that are a weeke old, besides others that are a batching.

The feare of wilde Beasts we have found to be almost needeleffe. Our great Ram-Goate was miffing fifteene dayes in October, and came home well againe, and is zet well with us. If the industry of men and presence of domesticall Cattle were applied to the good of this Country of New-found-land, there would

Shortly arise sust cause of contentment to the inhabitants thereof. Many of our Masters and Sea-faring men freing our fafetic, and hearing what a milde winter we had, and that no Ice had bin feene fleeting in any of the Bayes of this Country all this yeare (notwithstanding that then met one busined and fifty leagues off in the Sea great flore of Hands of Ice) doe begin to be in lone with the Countres, and doe talke of comming to the lind here to inhabit : falling in the reckning affect of the commoditie that they may make by the banke fishing, as by the busbandry of the Land, besides the ordinary fishing. At the Green-Bar, where some of our Company were a fishing in November, they report there is creat flore of good grounds without woods, and there is a thoufand acres together which they fay may be moved this yere. There is great flore of Deere, whereof they faw some divers times, and twice they came within that of them; and the Grey hound, who is lustie, had a courfe, but could not get upon them. But neerer unio Cape Razo, the filling, the number of persons that shall remaine here all the next winter shall be fitted, that there shall not want : notwithit anding about Albollantide, or the beginning of December, a Ship may be fent. Such BO 4 one as our Fleming was with Salt from Rochel; for at any time of the winter Ships may as well see and come biber, as when they doe, effectally before lanuary. This Summer I purpose to see most places betweene Cape Rale, Placentia, and Bona vilta, and at the returne of the filbing Ships to entertaine a fit number of men to maintaine bere the winter; and to fet ouer them, and to take the care of all things beremunoer of men a month of the William Colton, a discreete your man, and my brother Philip Guy, who have wintered with me, and have promifed me to undertake this charge until my returne the next Spring, or till it hall be otherwise differed of by you, and then together with such of the company at are willing to goe bome, and such others as are not fit longer to be entertained here, I intend to take passage in the filling Ships, and foreturne home: And then betweene that and the Spring to be present, to give you more ample fairfaction in all things, and to take fuch further resolution, as the importance of the enter-30 orife halr quire: wherein you hall finde me alwayes as ready as ener I bane bin to proceede and goe forward, God willing. And because at my comming home it will be time enough for mee to lay before you mine opinion tenching what is to be undertaken the next yeare, I will forbeare now to write of it; because you floud be the former aductifed of our welfare: and because such of the Company as are sent home both for their owne good, and that the emprofitable expense of withals and wages mucht coafe: I have laden little or nothing backs, that the faid Company might the better be at ease in the bold. I have also a Journall of the winde and weather from the latter end of August 1611, till Iune 1612. Writtenby Master William Colfton; and delivered to Master lobu Guy, Governour of the 40 Englif Colony in New sundland, at his returne from England thither, lune the feuenth 1612. By which it appeareth that the weather was somewhat more intemperate then it had beene the yeare before, but not intolerable, nor perhaps so bad as we have it sometims in England. Their Dogges killed a Wolfe, Otters, Sables, &cc. Captaine Easton a Pirat was troublesome to the Eng-Elband terrible to the French there : of whom I have added this Letter; for the Diarie of the weather and occurrents each day would be very tedious.

the fixteenth of May, 1611.

To Master Io HN SLANY Treasurer, and others of the Councell, and Company of the New-found-land Plantation, the twenty nine of July 1612.

Ight Worlhipfull, by my last of the seuenteenth of lune. I wrote you of the estate then, of all matters Rope to orient; min, oy my raje of toe fementeeme of the fince fafely arrined, together with Master Colbere, by the Holland Ship, which (I hope) is long fince fafely arrined, together with Master Colbere, by the Holland Ship, which (I hope) is long fince fafely arrined, together with Master Colbere, by the Holland Ship, which (I hope) is long fince fafely arrined, together with Master Colbere, by the Holland Ship, which (I hope) is long fince fafely arrined, together with Master Colbere, by the Holland Ship, which (I hope) is long fince fafely arrined, together with Master Colbere, by the Holland Ship, which (I hope) is long fince fafely arrined, together with Master Colbere, by the Holland Ship, which (I hope) is long fince fafely arrined, together with Master Colbere, by the Holland Ship, which (I hope) is long fince fafely arrined, together with Master Colbere, by the Holland Ship, which (I hope) is long fince fafely arrined, together with Master Colbere, by the Holland Ship, which (I hope) is long fince fafely arrined, together with Master Colbere, by the Holland Ship, which (I hope) is long fince fafely arrined, together with Master Colbere, by the Holland Ship, which (I hope) is long fince fafely arrined, together with the Holland Ship (I hope) is long fince fafely arrined, together the Holland Ship (I hope) is long fince fafely arrined to the Holland Ship (I hope) is long fince fafely arrined to the Holland Ship (I hope) is long fince fafely arrined to the Holland Ship (I hope) is long fince fafely arrined to the Holland Ship (I hope) is long fince fafely arrined to the Holland Ship (I hope) is long fince fafely arrined to the Holland Ship (I hope) is long fince fafely arrined to the Holland Ship (I hope) is long fince fafely arrined to the Holland Ship (I hope) is long fince fafely arrined to the Holland Ship (I hope) is long fince fafely arrined to the Holland Ship (I hope) is long fine fafely arrined to the Holland Ship (I hope) is long fine fafely arrined to the Holland Ship (I hope) is long fine faf fton, who bath (I doubt not) made by word of mouth, full relation of all matters. Because the proceedings of one Captaine Peter Ealton a Private, and his company fince, are most fit to beknowne, before I touch our Plantation businesse you shall understand, what they have bin unto this time: until the seventeenth of this prefent, the faid Captaine Easton remained in Harbor de Grace, there trimming, and repairing his Shipping, and commanding not onely the Carpenters of each Ship to doe bit businesse, but hath taken vi-60 Awals, munition, and necessaries from every Ship, together with about one bundred men out of the Bay. to man his Ships, being now in number fix. He purposed to have before he coeth, as is said, out of the land fine hundred men, while he remained there, two fenerall Companies to the number of about one hundred and eightie person: to each Company, being discontented, sole away from him in a Shallop, and tooke two Ships that were filming in Trinitie Bay, one belonging to Barnstable, and one other to Plimmouth, and so intend, to begin to be new beads, of that damnable confe of life. As I failed from hence towards Renoole, in a small Barge, I fell into one of their bands: and one of my company with hurt with a Muhet. there was one of their crew that wintered with me bere the first yeare, by whose meanes, and because I was so the Barke, they made bew, that they were forry that they had medled with vi : And so they departed from us, without comming aboutd. That which they fought after was men, to mercafe their number. Be-fore the faid Captaine Eattons departure, he fant three Ships into Trinitic Bay, to flore himselfe with victuals, munition, and men, who are faid to be worse vsed, then the Ships here be taketh much ordnance from them. The (and Easton was lately at Saint Iones, and is now, as farre as I can learne, at Feriland. where he taketh bu pleasure, and thereabouts, the rest are to meete bim. It is given out, that we will fend one Captaine Harvy in a Ship to Ireland, to understand newes about his pardon, which if be can obtaine to in the large and ample manner as be expecteth, then he giveth out, that be will come in: otherwise, it is thought, that he wil get Protection of the Duke of Florence, and that in his course berebence he will be ner about the Westwards of the Ilands of the Azores, to see whether he can light upon any of the Plate fleete, or any good rich brotte, before bis comming in Albeit, he bath so premailed here to the strengthening of bimselfe, and inconraging of others to attempt the like bereafter : yet, were there that course taken, as I hope hall be, it is a most ensie matter to represse them.

I have also a Diarie of the winter weather, and observations of occurrents from August 1612, till Aprill 1612. December was very full of Snow (for I dare not present the whole) and the fresh-water Lake was frozen ouer, and the Frost and Snow by the tenth of that moneth, as in 20 any part of the two former places. Ianuary was much milder till the foureteenth, from thence it was very frosty. Their Becre was frozen, and they dranke halfe water (an ill remedy to cold.) The Cattell did not well thrine, as comming out of a Countrie not fo cold. And therefore Irib Cattell (where the wincer is warmer) are not fo fit to be transported hither. George Danis died of the Scurule, and after him Edward Garten, Edward Hartland, John Tucker, and one and twenty were ticke (most of the Scuruie) the whole Colonie was fixtie two. February was much warmer and more temperate. Toby and Grigge died in March, the rest recoursed. Turneps being found as good to recover from the Scurvie as the Aneda tree to lacques Carriers Company. Nicho-Las Guies wife was deliuered of a lufty boy March 27. The Easterly windes and some Currents brought Ilands of Ice from the North Seas, which made the weather colder that Spring then in 30 the depth of winter when the same windes blowed, namely Bast and Northeast, those llands being blowne into the Baies, and the windes from them even in Aprill very snarpe; and the Snow on the tenth of Aprill as thicke as any time that yeare. In October lobu Guy with thirteene others in the Indeauour, and fine in the Shallop, went vp.

on Difcouery. A: Mount Eagle Bay they found flore of Scuruy-graffe on an Iland. In the South bottome of Trinitie Bay, which they called Sauage Harbour, they found Sauages houses, no peo-Copper kettle. ple in them; in one they found a Copper Kettle very bright (you shall haue it as one of them writ it in his owne tearmes) a furre Goune of Elke skin, fome Seale skins, an old faile and a fishing reele. Order was taken that nothing should be diminished, and because the Sauges should know that some had bin there, every thing was removed out of his place, and brought into one of the 40 Cabins, and laid orderly one upon the other, and the Kettle hanged ouer them, wherein there was put some Bisket, and three or foure Amber Beades. This was done to begin to win them by faire meanes. This time of the yeare they live by hunting; for wee found twelve Elkes hoofes, that were lately killed. A little peece of flesh was brought away, which was found to be a Beuer Cod, which is forthcomming to be feene. Their Houses there were nothing but Poles fet in round forme meeting all together aloft, which they couer with Deere skins, they are about ten foote broad, and in the middle they make their fire : one of them was coursed with a faile, which they had gotten from fome Christian.

All things in this manner left, every one returned by the Moone-light, going by the brinks of the Lake voto the enterance of the made way : and a little before they came thither, they pal- 50 fed by a new Sanage house almost finished, which was made in a square forme with a small roofe, Their Oares, and so came to the Barke. They have two kinde of Oares, one is about foure foot long of one peece of Firre; the other is about ten foot long made of two peeces, one being as long, big, and round as a halfe Pike made of Beech wood, which by likelihood they made of a Biskin Oare, the other is the blade of the Oare, which is let into the end of the long one flit, and whipped very strongly. The short one they wse as a Paddle, and the other as an Oare. The thirtieth, without any further businesse with the Sauages, we departed thence to the Northerne side of Trinity Bay, and anchored all that night under an Iland. The one and thirtieth, we rowed unto an harbour, which now is called Alballowes; which hath adioyning vnto it very high land. November the fixt, two Canoas appeared, and one man alone comming towards vs with 2 60

Sauages.

Flag in his hand of a Wolfes skin, shaking it and making a loud noise, which we tooke to be for a parley: whereupon a white Flag was put out, and the Barke and Shalloprowed towards them, which the Sauages did not like of, and to tooke them to their Canoas againe, and were going a-Way : whereupon the Barke wheazed voto them, and flourthed the Flag of trace, and came to

anker, which pleafed them, and then they staied: prefently after the Shallop landed Master Whittington with the Flagge of truce, who went towards them. Then they rowed into the shoare with one Ganoa, the other standing aloofe off, and landed two men, one of them having the white skin in his hand, and comming towards Mafter Whittington, the Sauage made a loud speech, and thaked the skin, which was antwered by Matter Whittington in like manner, and as the Sauage drew neere, he threw downe the white skin on the ground, the like was done by Mafter Whittington : whereupon both the Sauages paffed over a little water ftreame cowards Mafter Whitington, dancing, leaping, and finging, and comming together, the foremost of them presented voto him a chaine of leather full of small Periwinckle shels, a spitting knife, and a Feather that stacke in his care : the other gaue him an Arrow without a head; and the former was requited with a linnen Cap, and a hand Towell, who put presently the linnen Cap your his head; and to the other he game a Knife; and after hand in hand, they all three did fine and dance; your this, one of our company called Francis Topion went alhoare, vnto whom one of the Sausges came running, and gave him a Chaine, such as is before spoken of, who was gratified by Francis Topton with a Knife and a small peece of Brasse. Then all foure together danced, laughing and making fignes of ioy and gladnesse, sometimes thriking the brests of our company, and sometimes their owne. When fignes were made that they should be willing to suffer two of our Company more to come on theare, for two of theirs more to be landed and that Bread and Drinke should be brought ashoare, they made like wife fignes that they had in their Canoas meate also to eate : upon this the Shalto lop rowed aboord, and brought lohn Gay and Master Teage a shoare, who presented them with a Shirt, two table Napkins, and a Hand-towell, giving them Bread, Butter, and Reasons of the Sunne to eate, and Beere, and Aquanita to drinke: and one of them blowing in the Aquanita Bottle, that made a found, which they fell all into a laughing at. After, Maiter Croose and John Cronther came alhoare, whom they went to falute giving them shell Chaines, who bestowed Gloues upon them. One of the Sauages that came last alhoare, came walking with his Oare in his hand, and feemed to have fome command over the reft, and behaved himfelfe civilly: For when meate was offered him, he drew off his Mitten from his hand before hee would receive it. and gaue an Arrow for a prefent without a head : who was requited with a dozen of Points. After they had all eaten and drunke, one of them went to their Canoa, and brought vis Beeres fiells dried in the smoake or winde, and drawing his Knife from out of his necke, hee cut every man a peece, and that favoured very well. At the first meeting, when figures were made of mouse to tate, one of the Sauages prefently ran to the banke fide, and pulled vp a roote, and gate it the Maller Whittington, which the other Sauge perceiving to be durtie tooke it out of his hand, and went'to the water to walh it, and after divided it among the foure, it tafted very well: hee that came ashoare with the Oare in his hand, went and tooke the white skin that they hailed vs with, and gaue it to Mafter Whittington ; and prefently after they did take our white Flagge with them in the Canoa, and made negres vuto vs that we should repaire to our Barke, and so they put off, for

In the two Canoas there were eight men, if none were women (for commonly in enery Canoa there is one woman) they are of a reasonable stature, of an ordinary middle sife, they goe bareheaded, wearing their haire fomewhat long, but round : they have no Beards; behinde they have a great locke of haire platted with feathers, like a Hawkes Lure, with a feather in it flanding Their fathions vpright by the crowne of the head, and a small locke platted before, a short Gown made of Stags skins, the Furre innermoft, that ranne downe to the middle of their legges, with fleenes to the middle of their arme, and a Beuer skin about their necke, was all their apparell, faue that one of them had shooes and Mittens, so that all went bare-legged, and most bare-foote. They are full eyed of a blacke colour; the colour of their haire was divers, some blacke, some browne; and some yellow, and their faces something flat and broad, red with Oker, as all their apparell is, and the rest of their body : they are broad brested, and bould, and stand very vpright. Their Canoa, are about twenty foote long, and foure foote and a halfe broad in the middle a. Their Canoas loft, and for their Keele and timbers, they have thin light peeces of dry Firre, rended as it were lathes: and initead of Boords, they yie the outer Burch barke, which is thin, and hath many folds, fowed together with a thred made of a small root quartered. They will carry foure persons well, and weigh not one hundred weight : they are made in forme of a new Moone, item and iterne alike, and equally diffant from the effectel breadth; from the stem and sterne here riseth a yard high a light thin staffe whipped about with small rootes, which they take hold by to bring the Canoa alhoare, that ferueth inflead of ropes, and a harbour, for every place is to them a harborough; where they can goe ashoare themselves, they take aland with them their Canoa; and will neuer put to Sea but in a calme, or very faire weather : in the middle the Canca is higher a great deale then in the Bowe and quarter, they be all bearing from the Keele to the portleffe not with any circular line but with a right line. They had made a Tilt with a Saile that they got from some Christian, and pisched a dozen poles in the ground ucere, on which were hanged divers Furs, and chaines made of fhels, which at that inftant we fell not in the reckoning to what intent it was done, but after it came to our minde, as hereafter you shall perceiue.

The feuenth day we spent in walking, and in beginning a houte to shelter is when we should come thither hereafter, ypon a small lland of about hie acres of ground, which is iopred to the mane with a small Beech i for any bartering with the Sauges there cannot be a fitter place.

The eight day it began to freeze, and there was thin Ice our the found; and because we heard nothing more of the Sauages we began to return out of the Sauages had made two dayes before fire in, wer found all things remaining there, as it was when we parced, when an old Boat faile, three or foure shell chaines, about twelve Eures, of Beauers most, a Fox skin, a Sable skin, a Bard skin, and an old Mitten, fee teuery one yon a feueral user most, a Fox skin, a Sable skin, a Bard skin, and an old Mitten, fee teuer yone yon a feueral work when you were the same faithful that they would stand to our courtese to leave for it what wee should thinke good. 18 Beause we were not furnished with fit things for to trucke, we tooke onely a Beauer skin, a Sable skin, and a Bird skin, seauing for them a Hatcher, a Knife, and foure Needles threaded. Mater Whitisingern had a paire of Cizzars which he left therefor a small Beauers skin, all the reft we left there withouched, and came that night to the harbour that we were in at our entring, which we call Flage flaffe Harbour because we had because we were in a tour entring, which we call Flage flaffe Harbour because we had not there the Flage-flaffe Harbour because we had not the standard of the which dwell there. For in no other place we here we were could we perceit user to only any above of them, &c. of them of them of them, &c. of the mean the manufacture of them of the mean to the were the were could we perceit out any tokens of any aboade of them, &c. of the mean them.

Captaine RICH ARD WHITBOVERES Voyages to New-foundland, and observations there, and thereof; taken out of his Printed Booke.

T it well knowne, that my breeding and coerfe of life hath beene fuch, as that I have long time fet many people on worke, and ipene most of my daies in travell, fixedly in Merchandizing, and Sea-Voyages. I have beene often in France, Spain, 30 that, Partugall, Suan, Demarks, Normy, Spraceland, the Cameries, and Sorial lands: and let the New-found-land; it is almost for familiarly knowne to me as my owne Comercy.

In the year $18.1 fermed winder the then Lord Admirall, as Captaine in a Ship of my owne fet forth at my charge against the Spanish of mountained a direct such time as that service was sended, taking my leave of his Honour, I had his fauourable Letters to one Six Robert Demis, in the Countie of Demon, Rnight; whereby there might be some course taken, that the charge as well of my owne Ship, as also of two other, and a Primace, with the victuals, and men therein imploited, should not be any way burthensome to me. Wherein there was such order given by the then right Honorable Lords of the printe Countell, that the same was well satisfied: which service is 40 to be seen recorded in the Booke as White Hall.

Now to expresse the most as roome tand.

Now to expresse to make most of the prefant purpose, My first Voyage thicker, was about fortie yeers since, in a worthis Shippe, of the fant purpose, My first Voyage thicker, was about fortie yeers since, in a worthis Shippe, of the burthen of three hundred tun, set forth by one Malter Coston of Sonth-hampton: wee were bound to the Grand Bay (which leted on the Northisle of that Land) purpoing there to trade then with the Sauage people (for whom we carried fundry commodities) and to kill Whales, and to make Traine Oyle, as the Biscainer doe these yeerely in great solundance. But this our intended Voyage was outer-thowome, by the indifference of our Captaine, and faint-hartednesse of sone Gentlemen of our Companie; whereupon we see faile from thence, and bare with Trinny Has. In: in Now-found-land; where we killed great store of fish, Deere, Baeres, Beauers, Scales, Otters, and signishe, with abundance of Sea-fowle; and so returning for England, wee arrived life at South-

In a Voyage to that Countrie, about fix and thirtie yeeres fince, I had chen the command of a worthly Ship of two bundred and twenty tun, fet forth by one Mafter Greake of South-hampters. At that time Sit Humfrey Gibert, a Draumfare Knight, came thinker with two good Ships and Pinnace, and brought with him a large Patent, from the late most renowned Queene Elizabrid, and in her name tooke patietion of that Countrie, in the Harbour of Sain Labris, whereoff was an ive-wincile. He failed from thence towards Vigninia; and by reason of ione winappy direction in his course, the greatest Ship he had strucke yono Shelues, on the Coast of Casadiae, and was there both, with most gart of the company in her; And he himselfe being then in a smill Panace of twenty tun, in the company of his Vice-Admiral (one Captaine Haper) returning towards England, in a great storme, was our whelmed with the Sean, and so presided.

In another Voyage I made thither, about foure and thirty yeeres past, wherein I had the command of a good Shup, partly mine one: as that time own Sir Bernard Drake of Denouliers, Kongis, came thither with a Commission, and having divers good Ships vnder his command, hee there took many Ports, all Ships laden with Pith, and brought them into England as Prizes. Omitting to speak of other Voyages, I made thither, during the late Quiene raign, I will deficend to later time for the Control of the Control of

Fallon, came there, and had with him ten faile of good Ships well furnished and very rich. I was kept eleuen weekes vnder his command, and had from him many golden promifes, and much wealth offered to be put into my hands, as it is well knowne : I did perswade him much to defift from his euill course; his intreaties then to me, being that I would come for England, to some friends of his, and follicite them to become humble petitioners to your Maiestie for his pardon: To but having no warrant to touch fuch goods, I gave how thankes for his offer; onely I requefted him to releafe a Ship that he had taken voon the Coaft of Guinnie, belonging to one Captaine Rably of For in Cornewall; a man whom I knew but onely by report: which he accordingly releafed. Whereupon I prouided men, victuals, and a fraught for the faid Ship, and to fent her home to Dartmonth in Donen, though I never had fo much as thankes for my kindeneffe therein. And is leaving Easton, I came for England, and gave notice of his intention, letting paffe my Voyage I intended for Naples, and loft both my labour and charges : for before my arrivall, there was a para don granted, and ient him from Ireland. But Easten honering with those ships and riches voon the Coalt of Barbarr, as he promifed, with a longing defire, and full expectation to be called home, loft that hope by a too much delaying of time by him who carried the Pardon. Whereupon he failed 20 to the Straights of Gibraltar, and was afterwards entertained by the Duke of Sauer, under whom

I was there allo in the yeere 1614 when Sir Henry Manuaring was vpon that Coaft, with fine good Ships (frongly provided: he caused me to spend much time in his company, and from him I returned into England, although I was bound from thence to Masselia, to make fale of such goods at I then had, and other imploiments, &c.

In the yeere 1615, I returned agains to Nan-found Lond; carrying with mee a Committion out of the high Court of Admiratici, vnder the great Seale thereof, authoriting me to empannell luries, and to make inquire youn Oath, of finally abules and diforders committed amongst Fiftermen yeerfly you that Coast, and of the fixtest means to redreft the fame, with some cuber points, 10 hauing a short particular relation to the Coffice of the Lond Admiratil.

Shortly after my returns from Lubons, I was fent for by a Gentleman, who about a yeare before, by a grant from the Patentees, had vindertaken to faitle people in New-Joned-Lonei; he acquainted me with his defigues, & after fame conference touching the fame, wer so concluded, that he gaue me a conneisance vinder his hard and seale for the terms of my life, with full power to gouverne within his circuit you that Coast; whereuport/being defirout traduunce that worke) in Anne 1618, I siled chither in a Ship of my owne, which was victualled by that Gentleman, my selle, and some others. We likewise them did set forth another Shipsfor a fishing Voyage, while also carried one victuals for those people which had been formerly sellent to inabatic there: but 50 this Ship was intercepted by an English eiting Captaint/that went forth with Sit water Raleigh) who tooke the Malter of her, the Boartwains, de two others of the boff men, with much of her victuals (the refl of the Company for feare renning into the woods) and so left the Ship as a Prize, study of the sellent sellent in the sellent sellent

And it bath bin well approved by fome of our Nation, who have lived there these many weeres, that summ in the winter it is as pleafant and healthfull as England is, And although the example offone Sammer be no certain rulefdrother yeeres; yet thus much alio can I truely affirme. that in the pence 1615 of the many thousands of English, French, Portugal, and others, that were then your that Coaft (among it whom I failed to and iro more then one hundred leagues) I neither faw nor heard in all that exauell, of any man or boy of either of these Nations, that died there during the whole Voyage i neither was so much as any one of them sicke.

The Inhibitan:s, with their nature and cuftomes.

The natural Inhabitants of the Countriers they are but few in number, fo are they fomething 20 rude and fausge people; having neither knowledge of God, nor living under any kinde of civil goperment, In their habits, customs & marmers, they refemble the Indians of the Continent, from whence (L fuppole) they come; they live altogether in the North and West part of the Country, which is seldome frequented by the English But the Enench and Biscaines (who refort thither veerely for the Whale-fishing, and also for the Cod-fish) report them to be an ingenious and tra-Stable posse(being well view) they are ready to affilt them with great latiour and patience, in the killing, cutting, and boyling of Whales; and making the Traine Oyle; without expectation of other reward, then a little Bread, or some fuch imalihire.

Bayesinthat

All along the coast of this Countrie, there are many spacious and excellent Bayes, same of them The conveni- ilretching into the land, one towards mother, more when twentie leagues. On the East fide of the Land, assche Bayes of. Trinite and Genepion; which Hercheth themselves towards the 30 Sauthernell To Rose and Genetic Review to the 12 Control of the 12 South wells Tor Bay, and Capeles Bay, lying alio on the Eaft, firetch toward the West: the Bayes of Trepaffer, Si Mary, Berrell, and Plaifager; on the South part of the Land, extend their armes toward the North : The great Bay of S. Rerenlying on the South-west side of the Land, and East, Souther befrem the gratt Rings of Contenbeing about ewentie leagues diffant, the fame firetcheth toward the Eait. And here I pray you note, that the bottoms of thefe Bayes doe meete together within the compaffe of a small carpuis; by meanes whereof our men passing ouer land from Bay to Bay may with much ficultiond foouer the whole Countrie.

From the Bay of S. Beer sound about the Well lake of the Land, till you come to the grand Bang Which lieth on the North fide of the Countrie; and fo from the het; sill you come round, back 40 to Torrion Base, are abundance of largetande xeellene Bayes ; which are the leffe knowne, because not frequenced by the English, who teldome fift to the Northward of Tringie Bay.

Commodious

And stude observed, the round about the Coast and in the Rayes, there are many final Ilander noment them durther off chesis langue from the land both faire and fruitfull; neither doth thy Harbours any one part of the world afford greace fore of good Harbours, more free from dangers, or more commodess; then are there built by the admirable workmanship of God; I will onely instance awe or three of the chiefelt, for forse friental reafons. Trimble Harbour lyes fortie nine degrees North datitude, being very commodically fea-

Trinitie Harbor affording diuers good

sted to secenie thepping in reasonable meather, both to such or in and from thence to falle towards erther the East , Weft, or South : It hath three drimes or Rivers ; long and large enough 50 for many hundred fayleiof Ships, to moare fast at Anchor neere a mile from the Harbours month; close adioyning to the Rivers ide, and within the Harbour is much open land, well Roredtwitte Graffe fefficiebt., Winter and Summen; to maintaine great flore of ordinary Cattell, befides Hogges and Goats; refugh beads were carried thither; and it Randeth North, moft of any Harbour in the Land, where our Nation practifeth Fishing; It is necre vuto a great Bay lying on the North best of it, called the Bay of Flowers, to which place no Ships repaire to film; parthy intregard of fundry Rockes, and Ledger lying even with the water, and full of danger : bits shiefly des Loonie Gure) bequife the Savage people of that Countrey doe there in-Sangerliuing babice trains of elem fecratly every years . Some into Trimite Bay and Harbour, in the night nection times, purpolely to fleate Sailers Lines, Hatchers; Hooker, Knines, and tich like. And 60 this Bay is not three, English milesount Land from Trimtie Bay in many places ; which people is they might bee triduced to the knowledge of the true Trinitie indeed, no doubt but it would bee a most sweet and acceptable facrifice to God, an enertailing honour to your Maiefly and the heavenlieft bleffing to those poore Creatures, who are buried in their own tuperitions ignorance. The taske thereof would proue easie, if it were but well begun, and constantly seconded by industrious spirits: and no doubt but God himselse would set his hand to reare vp and advance fo noble, to pious, and to Christian a building.

The bottome of the Bay of Trinity lieth within four leagues through the land South-west, The bottoms Southerly from Trings, as by experience is found, and it comes neere vnto the Bay of Trepaffer, of divers Baies and the bottome of some other Bayes, as I have alreadie touched before.

Trepaffer in like manner is as commodious a Harbour, lying in a more temperate climate, almost in 46. degrees, the like latitude, and is both faire and pleasant, and a wholesome Coast, free The Harhouse from Rockes and Shelues : fo that of all other Harbours, it lies the South-moft of any Harbour of Trease to to in the Land, and most conveniently to receive our Shipping to and from Virginia, and the ing commodi-Bermuda Hands; and also any other Shipping that shall passe to and from the River of Cana- oully. dy and the Coast thereof; because they vivally passe and returne in the fight of the Land of Tree paffe; and also for some other purpoles, as shall be partly declared in the following discourse. The foile of this Countrie in the Vallies and fides of the Mountaines, is fo fruitfull, as The fertilitie of that in divers places, there the Summer naturally produceth out of the fruitfull wombe of the foyle, the earth, without the labour of mans hand, great pleneie of greene Peale and Fitches, faire, round, full and wholesome as our Fitches are in England: of which I have there fed on many times; the hawmes of them are good folder for Cattell and other Beafts in the winter, with the helpe of Hay; of which there may be made great flore with little labour in divers places of 20 the Countrie.

Then have you there faire Strawberries red and white, and as faire Raspasse berrie, and Goose- Severalliores berries, as there be in England; as also multitudes of Bilberries, which are called by some of Fruits there Whortes, and many other delicate Berries (which I cannot name) in great abundance. There growing. are also many other fruites, as small Peares, sowre Cherries, Filberds, &c. And of these Berries and Fruits the ftore is there fo great; that the Marriners of my Ship and Barkes Companie, have often gathered at once, more then halfe an Hogshead would hold; of which divers times eating their fill, I never heard of any man, whose health was thereby any way impaired.

There are also Herbes for Sallets and Broth; as Parshe, Alexander, Sorrell, &c. And also Flow- Herbs & Flow ers, as the red and white Damaske Rofe, with other kindes, which are most beautifull and de- ers both plealightfull, both to the fight and fmell. And questionlesse the Countrie is stored with many Physi- fant and medicall herbs and roots, albeit their vertues are not knowne, because not fought after; yet within cinable, thele few yeares, many of our Nation finding themselves ill, have bruised some of the berbs and ftreined fome of the nuce into Berre, Wine or Aquanite; and fo by Gods affiftance, after a few drinkings, it hath restored them to their former health. The like vertoe it hath to cure a wound or any iwelling, either by washing the grieued places with some of the lierbes boiled, or by applying them to thereunto (plaitter-wife) which I have feene by often experience. This being the naturall fruitfulneffe of the earth, producing such varietie of things, fit for foode, without the labour of man : I might in reason hence inferre, that if the same were manured, and husbanded in fome places, as our grounds are, it would be ape to beare Corne, and no leffe fertill then the Enga 40 lifb foile.

But I neede not confine my felfe to probabilities ; feeing our men that have wintred there di- Corn growing uers yeeres, did for a triall and experiment thereof fowe fome small quantitie of Corne, which I there, reclaing faw growing veriefaire; and they found the increase to be great, and the graine very good; and good increase, it is well knowne to me, and divers that trade there yeerely, how that Cabbage, Carrets, Turneps, Lettice, and fuch like, proue well there. In divers parts of the Countrie there is great store of Deere, & some Hares, manie Foxes, Squir? Store of Deere rels, Beuers, Wolues, and Beares, with other fores of Beafts, feruing as well for necessicie, as for &other Beafts profit and delight. Neither let me feeme ridiculous, to annex a matter of noueltie, rather then Ararecxample weight, to this discourse. In the yeere 1615, it was well knowne to eight and fortie persons of of the gentle my Companie, and divers other men, that three feuerall times, the Wolues & Beafts of the Coun-nature of the trie came downe neere them to the Sea-fide, where they were labouring about their Fish, howling and making a noise : so that at each time my Mastiffe Dogge went onto them (as the like in that Countrie hath not been feene) the one began to fawne and play with the other, and so went M Guiss Matogether into the Woods, and continued with them, euerie of thefe times, nine or ten daies, and did returne voto vs without any burt.

The Land Fowle (besides great number of small Birds flying vp and downe, some without name, that line by scraping their food from the earth in the hardest winter that is) there are also Hawkes great and imall, Partridges, Thrush, and Thrussels abundance, very fat. As also Filladies, Nightingales, and such like, that ling most pleasantly. There are also Birds that line by prey, as belly. 60 Rauens, Gripes, Crowes, &c. For Water-fowle, there is certainly fo good, and as much varietie, as in any parcot the world; as Geele, Dicks, Pidgeons, Gulls, Pengnins, and many other forts. Thele Penguins are as bigge as Geefe, and flie not, for they have but a little flort wing, and they multiply to infinitely, vpon a certaine flat Hand, that men drive them from thence vpon a boord Penguing, into their Boates by hundreds at a time; as if God had made the innocencie of fo poore a crea-SHITHE 3 bound vied a. Walfe there more degged Iv. one pulling the other the rure to become such an admirable influment for the sustentation of man. There are also Godwits. Curlewes, and a certaine kinde of Fowle are called Oxen and Kine, with fuch like: which Fowle doe not onely freed those that trade thither greatly for foode, but also they are a great furthering to divers Ships voyages, because the abundance of them is such, that the Fishermen doe bast their hookes with the quarters of Sea-Fowle on them : and therewith fome Ships doe veerely take a great part of their Fishing Voyages, with some baite, before they can

Freih water and Springs.

The fresh waters and Springs of that Countrie, are many in number, and withall very pleafair, delightfull and wholefome, that no Countrie in the world hath better. And Pewell for fire is to plen stull, that there is never like to be want of that commoditie.

Many forts of growing.

In like minner there is great abundance of Trees fit to be imploied in other feruiceable vies: There are Furre and Sproce trees, found, good, and fit to mail Ships withall; and as commodious for boards and buildings as the Spruce and Firre trees of Norman and out of thele came abundance of Turpentine. No Countrie can thew Pine and Birch trees, of fuch height and greatnesse as those are there; and doubtlesse, if some store of your Maiesties subjects doe once settle there to live, and would be industrious to fearch further, and more throughly into the Countrie, then as vet it hath beene, there might be found many other commodities of good worth. Among the which I may not omit, that there is much probabilitie of finding Mines, and making of Iron

The Ruers also and Harbors are generally stored with delicate Fish, as Salmons, Pearles, Ecles, 20 Herring, Mackerell, Flounders, Launce, Capelin, Cod, and Troutes the fairest factest and tweetest, that I have seene in any part of the world. The like for Lobsters, Crabfish, Muskles, Hens, and other varietie of Shel-hill great store. And also observe here, that in these places there is vfailly store of the spawne and frie of seuerall forts of fishes: whereby the Sea-towle line so fat as they are there in the winter : And likewife the Beuers, Octers, and fuch like, that feeke their foode in the Ponds, and fresh Rivers. The Seas likewise all along the Coast, doe plentitully abound in other forts of fish as Wnales, Spanish Mackerell, Dorrell, Pales, Herring, Hogs, Porpofes, Seales, and fuch like royall fish, &c. But the chiefe commodity of New-found land yet knowne, and which is growne to be a fet-led trade, and that may be much bettered by an orderly Plantation there (if the Traders thither will take some better course, then formerly they have done, as shall be declared) if the Codfishing voon that Coast, by which our Nation and many other Countries are enricht. And if I should here fet downe a valuation of that Fish, which the French, Biscaines, and Portugals fetch yeerely from this Coast of New-found land, and the Banke, which lieth within fine and twen-The benefit aring to France, tie leagues from the South-Cape of that Countrie, where the French vie to fift Winter and Summer, viually making two Voyages energy yeare thither : (To which places, and to the Coast of Canady, which lieth neere vnto it, are yearely tent from those Countries, more then foure hundred faile of Ships:) It would feeme incredible, yea some men are of opinion, that the people of France, Spains and Italy, could not so well live, if the benefit of the fishing voon this Coast, and your Mai-flies other Dominions, were taken from them.

But I truff it will be f. fficient, that I give an estimate of our owne trading thither, and partly of the wealth and commodities we reape thereby, without any curious fearch into other mens profits. In the yeere 1615, when I was at New-found-land with the Commission before mentioned, which was an occasion of my taking the more particular observations of that Country, there were then on that Coaft, of your Maiesties subjects two hundred and fiftie faile of Ships great and finall. The burthens and Tunnage of them all, one with another fo neere as I could take notice, allowing every Ship to be at least threescore tun (for as some of them contained lese, so many of them held more) amounting to more then 1,000, tunnes. Now for every threefcore tun burthen, according to the vivall manning of Ships in those Voyages, agreeing with the note I then tooke, there are to be fet downe twentie men and boyes : by which computation in thefe to two hundred and firtie faile, there were no leffe then fine thouland persons. Now enery one of there Ships, to neere as I could guesse, had about 1 20000. fish, and five tunne of traine Oyle one with another. So that the totall of the Fish in these two hundred and fiftie faile, when it was brought into England, France or Spaine (being fold after the rate of foure pound, for every thoutained in moit find of fifth, fixicore fifthes to the hundred, which is not a pennie a fifth, and if it yeelds leffe, it was ill fold) amounted in monie to 120000, pound,

Ships did a-

Now, as I have faid before, allowing to every Ship of fixtie tun, at least five tun of traine Oyle; the totall of that arifeth to 1250, tun; each tun, whether it be fold in England, or elfewhere, being voder-valued at twelve pound. So as the whole value thereof in monie, amounteth to the fum of 15000. pound, which added to the fish, it will appeare that the totall value of the fish, and 60 Traine Oyle of those 250. faile of Ships that yeere, might yeelde to your Maiesties fubirets better then the Summe of 135000. pound, omitting to reckon the ouer-prices which were made and gotten by the fale thereof in forrain Countries, being much more then what is vivally made at home, and to the like in other yeeres. And this certainly, in my understanding, is a point worthy of confideration, that fo great wealth should yearely be raised, by one sole commodity of that Countrie, yea by one onely fort of fish, and not vpon any other trade thither, which must needes yeelde, with the imploiments thereof, great riches to your Maiesties Subiests: And this alfo to be gathered and brought home by the fole labour and industry of men, without exchange or exportation of our Coine, and native commodities, or other adventure (then of necellarie pronifions for the fishing) as Salt, Nets, Leads, Hookes, Lines, and the like; and of victuals, as Bread, Beefe, and Porke, in competent measure, according to the number and proportion of men imployed in those Voyages. The connecting of these commodities (gotten by nihing) into mony, cannot choose but be a great benefit to all your Maiesties Kingdomes in many respects.

What the charge in fetting forth of thefe two hundred and fiftie faile might amount vnto (brwhat the charge in the land of the country, yeeldeth) I hold it not ficher to teet down, left I thould the trading on the year to the cause by form therein. And withalian to be considered, that the trade thither (as now it there will as the country of the count is) doth yearely let on worke, and relieue many numbers of people, as Bakers, Brewers, Coopers, ford to feuerall Ship-Carpenters, Smiths, Net-makers, Rope-makers, Linesmakers, Hooke-makers, Bully and Sup-Largest value (rades, which with their families bage their belt menns of rather Chine, After this the kers, and many other crades, Wonges. and those were full of the yolks of Egges, that they had taken and boiled hard, and so dried small, which the Sauages vied in their brosh, as Sugar is wied in some meater; they had great store of the Skins of Deere, Beauers, Beares, Seales, Otters, and divers other fine skins which were well dreffed; as also great flore of feuerall forts of flesh dried; and by shooting off a Musket towards them, they all ran away naked without any apparell, but onely their hags on their heads, which were made of Seales skins, in fashion like our hats, sewed handsomely with narrow bands about them, let round with fine white shels, such as are carried from Portugal to Brafeile; where they palled to the Indians as ready monie. All their three Canoas their Flesh, Skins, Yolks of Egges. 40 Targets, Bowes and Arrows, and much tine Okar, and divers other things, they tooke & brought away, and shared it amongst those three that tooke it and brought to me the best Canoa, Bowes and Arrowes, and divers of their Skins, and many other things worth the noting : which may feeme to inuite vs to finde out some other trades with them. Now also I will not omit to relate something of a strange Creature that I first faw there in the yeere 1610, in a morning early as I was standing by the water side, in the Harbour of Saint lebns; which I espied verie swittly to come swimming towards me, looking cheerefully, as it had beene a woman, by the Face, Eyes, Nofe, Mouth, Chin eares, Necke and Forehead: It feemed to be fo beautifull, and in those parts to well proportioned, having round about upon the head, all blew strakes, resembling haire, downe to the Necke (but certainly it was haire) for I beheld it long. and another of my companie also, yet living, that was not then farre from me; and seeing the 30 fame comming fo fwiftly towards mee, I itepped backe, for it was come within the length of a long Pike. Which when this strange Creature faw that I went from it, it presently the reupon dined a little under water, and did swim to the place where before I landed; whereby I beheld the shoulders and backe downe to the middle, to be as square, white and smooth as the backe of a man, and from the middle to the hirder part, pointing in proportion like a broad hooked Arrowshow it was proportioned in the forepart from the necke and floulders, I know not; but the fame came shortly after vnto a Boat, wherein one William Hawkridge, then my servant, was, that hath bin fince a Captaine in a Ship to the East Indies, and is lately there imploied againe by Sir Thomas Smith, in the like Voyage; and the same Creature did put both his hands upon the fide 60 of the Boate, and did ftriue to come into him and othersthen in the faid Boate : whereat

they were afraid; and one of them strooke it a full blow on the head; whereat it fell off from them: and afterwards it came to two other Boates in the Harbour; the men in them, for feare fled to land : This (I suppose) was a Mermaide. Now because divers have written much of Mermaides, I have prelumed to relate, what is most certaine of such astrange Creature that was feene at New-found-land: whether it were a Mermaide or no, I know not; I leave it for others to inleg, &cc.

The right Honorable Sir George Calvere, Knight jone of the principall Secretaries voto his Maiellie hath allo vindertaken to planta large Circuit of thet Countrie ! who hath already fent this ther this years and the former years, a great number of with and women; with all necessarie proin finns fit for them; where they live pleasantly, building of Houses, derfing of Land for Corne, and Meddowes, Cabage, Carrets, Turneps, and such like as also for Wood and Tobacco, Likewife they are there preparing to make Salt, for the preferention of Pith another years, and for divers other feruices. And his Honor is likewise well pleased to entertaine fuch as will adventure with him therein, ypon very to condition.

The Worthipfull John Slany of London Merchant, who is one of the undertakers of the New- 30 found Land Printation, and is Freaturer were the Parentees of that Societie, who have maintained a Colomie of his Maiellies lubicote there about welue yeeres, and they are willing to entertains foch as will further his Maieflies faid Plantaeton; whom firconditions.

Divers Worthipfull Citizens of the Civie of Brifoll; have vndertaken to plant a large Circuit of that Comerie, & they have maintained a Colony of his Maiefties lubieds there any time thefe five yeeres, who have builded there many faire Houses, and done many other good fernices, who live there very pleasantly, and they are well pleased to entertaine vpon fix conditions such as will be Adventurers with them.

The Worthipfull William Vanghan of Tarraced, in the Countie of Carmanthen, Doctor of the 40 Civill Law, hath alfo vadertaken to plant a Circuit in the New-found faut and hath in two feuerall yeeres sent thirther divers men and women, and hee is willing to entertaine such as will be Aduenterers with him vpon fit conditions.

And there are many other worthy perions Adventurers in the faid Plantation, whose names are not herein mentioned. And it is well hoped, that divers others will also put their helping hand to advance the same, when they are given to understand what honour and benefit may accrue thereby. And if his Maiesties subicets of this Kingdome may be willing to set torth from eueric feuerall Countrie, but one good Ship yearely thither, with people and prounions fit for them, it will be then not onely a great honour and benefit to his Marettie, but also a great increase of Shipping and Marriners, and the imploying and inriching of many thoulands of poore people which power people which people people which people people people people people people people which people peo iects, to let forth the charge at first, and foeuerie Parish to recour yearely their equall parts of the benefit which may accrue by the faid flocke, and thereby not onely disburden yeerely themselves of some of those which lie chargeable vnto them within their severall Parishes; but also yeerely yeelde a great benefit to every feuerall Countie, though it lie formething remote from the Sea-coast, if they imploy a discreete honest man there, who may yearely be accomptable to eucrie Parish of the charge, and likewise the benefit. The which will not be anie way burdensome or hurtfull vnto any; as the following difcourfe which I have written will plainly informe them.

We have a Meadow of about three Acres : it flourished lately with many corket's of good Hay, and now it is made no fir a Winter feeding. Wee hope to bee well fitted with many Acres of Meadow against another reere : of Passure-land, wee base already to ferme at least three hundred beads of Cattell: and to all this, if it please God, a good quantitie of Seed-ground shall be fitted, and such buildings as wee shall be able to

Now in the next place it may please your Honour to understand; That touching this Country, the Summer time here is fo faire. So warme, and of fo good a temperature, that it produceth many Hearbes and Plants very wholfome, medisinable, and delectable, many fruit Trees of fundry kindes, many forts of Berries wholfome to eate, and in measure most abandant infomuch as many forts of Birds and Beasis are relieved with them in time of Winter, and whereof with further experience I trust to ft d some for the turne of Drers. Our high lenells of Land are adorned with Woods, both fare and feemely to behold, and greene all Winter, Within Land there are Plaines innumerable, many of them containing many thou find Acres, very pleasant to see to, and well furnished with Ponds, Brookes and Riuers, very plentifull of sadry forts of Fife : besides store of Deere and other Beasts that yeeld both Food and Furre. Touching the Mandatus: I could not be rumaniful to flow the same unto you in a double bond, namely, lose 40 and datus: I could not be rumaniful to flow the same unto you in these rude lines, thereby to acquaint you with our health . the temperature of the Country, and the commodities and bleffings therein. And first, for the first : Concerning our health, there is not any man amongst our company, that bath beene licke Carcely one day lince be came , but bath beene able to follow his worke. The Climate differs but little from England, and I my selfe felt leffe cold here this Winter, then I did in England the Winter before by much. The arre u sweeter : for I nemer smelt any emil sauer in the Country, nor saw any venemous creature to burt mee. Gods bleffings upon this Land are manifold : As for wood and water, it passetb England : the one most sweet in growing and burning, the other most pleasant to taste, and good to drinke. For in Whisfau-bolidages (I taking with me Master Stoning) did coaft some ten miles in- 50 to the Country Wellward from our Plantation, to make some discovery of the Country, and to killa Deere; and being some fine miles into the Land, where wee lodged that night in a Wood, we found much Champion ground, and good leuels of one, two, three or foure bundred Acres together, and at the foot of each Mountaine and Small Hill, wee alwayes met with a faire fresh Riuer, or a sweet Brooke of running water, whereof wee freely drawke, and it did quench my thirst as well as any Beere, and much refresh vi both, and never offended our stomaches at all. Wee travelled three dayes, but found no Deere faue their footings, which came to paffe by meanes of a great fire that had burned the Woods a little before ten miles compasse. It began betweene Formouse and Aquatore; it burned a weeke, and then was quen-

to me more must be even that gaue fire to it, has I thinke he was a fernant hired by the Desil 60. I to doe that method deed, who [I doe not doubt] will pay him for his worke. In the night the Wolars being neere, did something affright us with howlings, but did not hart us: for wee had Dogs, Fire, and Sword to welcome them. As for the Beares, although there bee many; they beare us no ill will, I thinke, for L bane caten my part of two or three, and taken no bart by thems. Foxes heere are many, and as fubill as 4

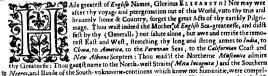

Foxe, yet have wee cooxned many of them of their rich coats, which our worthy Governour keepes carefully, as alfo of Cattagena's and Otters, whose concerings wee preserve as sitting presents for greater perfons. The Fowles and Birds of the Land are Partridges, Curlues, Filladayes, Black-birds, Bulfinches. Larkes, Spirrowes, and Juch like. Those of the Sea, are Goofe, Ducks of foure forts. Capderace, Teale. Suspes, Penourns, Murres, Hounds, Sanderlings, Redsbanks and others, all very fit, sweete and whol-Come. The Fowles of prey, are Tercells, Golbankes, Falcons, Laners, Sparhankes, Gripes, Offrein, Owles oreat and fmall, Runens, Guils. Preerils, and some others; and of most of these forts I bane killed many. As for the plentie of Cadfish it is well knowne unto you. Salmons , Eeles , Mackwell , Herrings, Lance, Caplin, Dog filb, Hollibuss, Flowkes, Lobsters, Crabs and Muskles: All and more then all thefe on are bere in great plentie, very good and sweet meat. The weld fruit and berries, are small Peares, Cherries, Nuts, Resberries, Stramberries, Barberries, Demberries, Hursleberries, with others all good to cate. Many faire Flowers I have feene here, which I cannot name, although I had learned Gerrards Herball by beart : But wild Rofes are here both red and damaike , as fragrant and faire as in England. All our Corne and Seedes baue profesed well, and are already growne almost to perfelt maturitie. &c.

I but propound their things to excite English thankfulneffe to God, and hatred to that Whoore, drunken wub bloud, which hath thus enchanted the Kings of the earth; yealike the Legion Deuill hath broken all chaines of allegeance, and hath initiated in hellish mysteries naturall sworne subjects to invasion and mutuall massacres; yea to account it tolerable, lawfull. commendable, meritorious, and in ordine ad deum, necessary (ô times !ô monsters!) to kill and murcher; and hath made it a compendious way to win the Kingdome of Heauen by killing the Kings of the Earth. I dare boldly aver, and by History make it good, (yez * in great part to a judicious observer the former parts of this Worke have shewed) that since the Papall challenge of Monarchy over Monarkes by Gregory the feuenth, the Deuills thousand yeeres of imprisonment being expired, Antichriftian Rome hath by Sword, Fire, Warres, Ciuill and Forraine, and other inhumane. immane. Exertical St. distellish furies procured the shedding of more humans bloud, then ever Heathen Rome in farre 20 4.1.4.3.4.66. longer time had shed to erect their Heathenish Empire, from the dayes of Romalus which founded the Citie, to Angultus which grounded and stablished the Empire, and Tiberius vader whom Christ was crucified : Yea if you adde the perfecutions of the succeeding Emperors till Inlien the Apollata ; yet haue the later Antichristian exceeded in numbers, as much as the executions of Warres are viually beyond all comparison of the Iudiciall and Legall. I adde, that as the Ethnike Romans spilt none (except in persecutions) but Ethnike bloud : so the pretended Christan Romists (except in the Indies and the Holy Land Wars) fled none in this account but Christian. This may feem a prodigal speech & prodigious paradox, to those which know not the millions which perished in the Holy Land Wars, fet & kept on foot about 200 veers together by Papall ambition : fo many hundreths of thousands which perished in the same times, by open warres made by 30 the Popes Crusados against the Albigenses, Waldenses, and what other names it pleased them to giue to better men then themselues, in almost eightie yeeres continued warres : So many Civill Warres in Germany, the fubicets and competitors armed by Crufados against the Emperours till that Eagle was plucked; where one Henry whom Hildebrand first deposed, fought fixtie battells: In England, France, Italy, and other parts, in the daies of King lobn, Fredericke the second, Coursde, Memfred, Phillip, and others : and after that, the long Bobemian broiles drenched in bloud after Hulles fire ; and lately fo innumerable millions (pauperis est numerate) in America and the llands Priefts, agents which these bookes plainly enince to have beene written in bloud by Roman authoritie and pretence ; not to make mention of the Philippinas, the East Indies, the Wars in Sicile and Naples; and the Greeke Empire first weakned, and after by Roman ambition lost : how many bundreth thou- 40 The Pope Ma- fands hath France loft of Christians within these last hundreth yeeres ! how many more have tafler Workman. ken their fatall farewells in the Belgian quarrell ! How doe thole Low-countries and Germany full flow in bloud ! That I fpeake not of our England and Ireland ! But I have the thoughts of those things, and therefore come to the 88, businesse, that also set on worke from Rome, the widest and openeft passage from hell for his ingresse and egresse, that was a Muriberer from the beginning, and in the last ages turning bimfelfe into an Angell of light , hath there established his principall Vicar under pretended titles and leemings of Christ and Christianitie. Yea this is also remarkable that in the treasons against Queene Elizabeth, and in those against our present Souereigne King Iames (whom God long preferue) by Wasson, Clerke, Cobbam, &c. at first, and in the Master and Monfter-peece (which was now ready to breake forth with violence and virulence from Hell, 50 and to blow up all other Treasons) that of the Gun-powder Traiters ; still the busiest part of the Tragedie is committed to some Romish Prieft or Iefuite, who should fit and frame the resolute kil the Queen, diffolutenesse of wild spirits to the execution of it or themselues. The Master Workman (I say He and Brifton not Beelzebub) is the Pope, as appeareth in those before mentioned, and in this of 88. whose Bull & Martin were declaratory against that Worthy of women followeth , as the contents thereof are delivered by Meteranus, to whole labours in this Story wee are principally indeteed. It was to be published in the Popes name by Cardinall Allen after the Nauie had arrived in England, to command the Englif to yeeld their obedience to the Duke of Parma. From the Pope therefore wee will begin our 88 Story, touching the preparation and fuccesse of that Armada fignamed inuincible.

NOw that all might becarried more closely, and that this Expedition might feeme made a-go gainft the Low-countries, rather then the English, a folemme meeting was appointed first neer Offend, after at Bronchburg in Flanders for a treaty of peace with the Queene of England. Henry Earle of Derby, the Lord Cobbam, Sir lames Croft, D. Dale ; D. Rogers were fent. Richardet plainly faid that he knew not what might be put in practife in the meane time against England. But the Prince and he being demanded if their were any enterprise of intrading England, they veterly denied any thoughts the rot. Count Aremberg, Campignie, Rebardot, Maes & Garnier were the Princes Delegares, and professed that they had fufficient Commission for treaty of peace. First a truce was propounded by the English and by them cemed. Then the English required that the ancient leagues betwixt the Kingsot England and the House of Burgundy might be renewed and confirmed, that the Low-countrimen might mior their priviledges and libertie of conference, that Spamiards and forraine forces might be removed, that neither they nor their neighbours should have cause to feare; and then the Queene would redeliner her foure Cautionary Townes. They whiled them with fuch answere as futed to their purpoles, and long adoe was made in weating and vnweating Penelopes web, till the Spanish Armada was upon the Coast, and the very Ordnance proclaimed in their eares a jurceafe from further illusions. Then did Parma dismisse them, pulled off his Vitor, vncafing the Fox, and ruly appearing in the Lions skin. But let vs now come to take view of this Fleet, and the preparations made for it.

The King of Spaine having with small fruit, about twenty yeeres together waged warre against the Netherlands, after deliberation with his Counfellours thereabout, thought it most convenient to affaul them once again by Sea, which had bin attempted fundry times heretofore; but not with for forces sufficient. Vinto the which expedition it flood him now in hand to ioine great puissance, as having the English people his protested enemies, whose Iland is so fituate, that it may either greatly helpe or hinder all fuch as fails into those parts. For which cause he thought good first of all to inuade England, being perswaded by his Secretary Esconedo, and by diners other well experienced Spaniards and Dutchmen, and by many English firgitives, that the conquest of that Iland was leffe difficult, then the conquest of Holland and Zealand. Moreover the Spannards were of opinion, that it would be farre more behoovefull for their King to conquer England and the Low countries all at once, then to bee constrained continually to maintaine a warlike Navie to defend his East and West Indie Fleets, from the English Drake, and from such like valiant enemies.

And for the same purpose the King Catholike, had given commandement long before in Italy & 60 Spaine, that a great quantitie of timber should be felled for the building of Ships; and had belides made great preparation of things and furniture requilite for fuch an expedition as namely in founding of braten Ordinance, in storing up of corn and victuals, in training of men to vie warlike weapons, in leaving and multering of Souldiers: infomuch that about the beginning of the yeer 1,88. he had finished such a mightie Nauie, & brought it into Lisbon Hauen, as neuer the like had before Ttttttt 2 that time failed upon the Ocean Sea.

This Name (as Diego Pimenielli afterward confessed) was esteemed by the King himselfe to 31000 persona containe 32000, perions, and to cost him every day orthoniand Directes.

There were in the fard Natie fine Terzaes of Spaniards (which Terzaes the Frenchmen call Regiments) under the command of fine Gouernours, tearmed by the Spatiards Mafters of the field; 3300, fouldiers, and among the rest there were many old and expert Souldiers chosen out of the Garrisons of Sicilie, Naples, and Terçera. Their Capraines or Colonels were Diego Pimentelli, Don Francisco de Toledo, Don Alonzo de Luçon, Don Nicolas de Isla, Don Augustia de Mexia: who had each of them two and thirty Companies under their conduct. Befides the which Companies there were many bands allo of Caftilians and Portugali, every one of which had their peculiar Governours, Captaines, Officers, Colours and weapons.

It was not lawfull for any man, under grieuous penaltiesto carry any woman or harlors in the Baggage of the Fleete : for which cause the women hired certaine Ships, wherein they failed after the Name : Amada. fome of the which being driven by tempest arrived upon the coast of France.

The Generall of this mightie Nauie, was Don Alonso Perez de Guzman Duke of Medina, Sido-10 nia, Lord of S. Lucar, and Knight of the golden Pleece; by reason that the Marquelle of Santa Cruz appointed for the fame dignity, decealed before the time:

John Martines de Ricalde was Admiral of the Fleete: Francis Bonadilla was chiefe Marshall: who all of them had their officers fit and requisite for the guiding and managing of fuch a multitude. Likewife Martin Aloreon was appointed Vicar generall of the Inquitition, being accompanied with more then a hundreth Monkes, to wit, lefustes, Capuchines, and Friers Mendicant, Befides whom also there were Philitians, Chirurgians Apothecaries, and whatfoeuer elfe pertained vnto the Hospitall.

Ouer and besides the forenamed Gouernours and Officers, being men of chiefe note, there were 124 very noble and worthy Gentlemen, which went voluntarily of their owne colls and charges, to the end they might fee fathious, learne experience; and atraine voto glory. Amongst whom was the Prince of Ascoli, Alonzo de Leina, the Marquette de Pennafiel, the Marquette de Ganes, the Marqueffe de Barlango, Count de Paredes, Count de Teluie, and divers other Marquetes and Earles of the honorable families of Mendena, of Toledo, of Pachicco, of Cordono, of Guzman, of Marriques, and a great number of others.

I have by me the Dukes Orders for the whole Nanie, during this Voyage, made about the Gallian Saint Martin, May 28. the beginning whereof I have added, the whole would be too long.

Don ALIONS O PERES DE GVSMAN, the good Duke of Medina, Sidonia. Countse of Nebla, Marquelle of Cashelhe in Africa, Lord of the Citie Saint Lucar, Captaine Generall of the Occian Sea of the Coast of Andaluzia, and of this Armie of his Maiestie, and Knight of the honorable Order of the golden Fleece.

Doe ordaine and command, that the generall Mafters of the field, all Captaines of the Sea Dil lats, Mafters, Souldiers, Mariners, and Officers, and whatfoeuer other people for the Land or Sea feruice commeth in this Armie, all the time that it indureth, shall be thus governed, as hereafter followeth, viz.

The cause of

Their Shrift

First, and before all things, it is to be understood by all the about named from the highest to the lowest; that the principall foundation and cause that bath mound the King his Maiestie to make and continue this journie, hath beens, and is, to ferue God, and to returne vnto his Church a great many of contrite foules that are oppressed by the Heretikes, enemies of our holy Catholike faith, which have the m fubicets to their feets and vnhappine fe : and for that every one.may put his eyes upon this marke, as we are bound, I doe command and much defire enery one, to give charge vinto the inferiors and those vinder their charge to imbarke themselves, being shriven. and having received the Sacrament with competentand contrition for their finnes; by the which contriction and zeale to doe God fuch great fernice, he will carry and guide vs to his great glory: which is that which particularly and principally is pretended.

For a uoiding and others.

In like manner, I doe charge and command you, to have particular care, that no Soldier, Marriner, or other, that ferueth in this Armie, doe blatpheme, or rage against God, or our Lady, or any of the Saints, vpon paine that he shall therefore sharply be corrected, and very well chaftened, as it shall feeme best voto vs : and for other oather of leffe qualitie, the Governours in the 30 fame Ships they goe in shall procure to remedy all : they shall punish them in taking away their allowance of Wine, or otherwise as they shall thinke good. And for that the most occasions come by play, you shall publikly prohibit it of pecially the games that are forbidden: and that none doe play in the night by no meanes.

Debarring

Articles follow to suppresse quarrels, to avoid disgracing any man, and all occasions of scandall, forbidding carriage of common women; with other orders for watchwords, attendance on the Admiral, for fire and wilde-fre, and lighes, armours bos, powder, match, and other necessary instructions, too long to be here particularifed: that in the height of hamaine policie, and religious bypocrifie, the hand of God in Englands preservation may be made onident.

The preparati-

While the Spaniards were furnishing this their Nauie, the Duke of Parma, at the direction 40 of King Philip, made great preparation in the low Countries, to give aide and affiftance vinto the Spaniards, building Ships for the same purpose, and sending for Pilots and Ship-wrights out of Italy. In Flandors he caused certaine despe channels to be made, and among the rest, the channell of Tper, commonly called Tper-lee, employing some thousands of workemen about that service : to the end that by the faid Cannell he might transport Ships from Answers and Ghends to Bruges where he had affembled aboue a hundreth small Ships, called Hoyes, being well stored with vi-Stuals, which Hoyes he was determined to have brought into the Sea by the way of Slays, or elfe to have conveied them by the faid Tper-lee, being now of greater depth, into any port of Flan-

In the River of Waten, he caused 70. Ships with flat bottomes to be built, every one of which 50 should ferue to carry 30, horfes, having each of them Bridges likewife for the Horfes to come on boord, or to goe forth on land. Of the same fashion he had provided 200, other vessels at Neinport, but not fo great. And at Dunkerk he procured 28. Ships of warre, fuch as were there to be had, and caused a sufficient number of Maxiners to be leuied at Hamburg, Breme, Emden, and at other places. He put in the ballast of the said Ships, great store of beames of thicke plankes, being hollow and belet with Iron pikes beneath, but on each fide full of claspes and hookes, to 10yne

He had likewife at Graveling provided 20. thousand of caske, which in a shore space might be compact and toyned together with nailes and cords, and reduced into the forme of a Bridge. To be thort, what focuer things were requifite for the making of Bridges, and for the barring & flep- 60 ping vp of Hauens mouthes with stakes, posts, and other meanes, he commanded to be made ready Moreouer, not far from Neimpore hauen, he had caused a great pile of wooden fagots to he laid, and other furniture to be brought for the rearing vp of a Mount. The most part of his Ships contained two Quens a peece to bake Bread in, with a great number of faddles, bridles, and fuch other like apparell for Horfes. They had Horfes likewife, which after their landing should serve to conuey and draw engines, fickli pieces, and other warlike prouifions. Necere vinto Nempere he had affembled an armie, ouer the which hee had ordained Camillo de

Monte to be Camp -mailer. This army conflitedor, 20, bands or enfignes of Italians, of ten bands of Wallons, eight of Scott, and eight of Burgundians, all which together amount vnto 56. bands euery band containing a hundreth perlons. Neere unto Dixmed there were muftered eightie bands of Dutchmen, lixtic of Spaniards, fix of high Germans, and leuen bands of Erelift fugitues, under the conduct of Sir William Stanlie, an English Knight In the luburbs of Cortreight there were 4000. horsemen together wich their horses ma readineffe : and at Waten 900, hories, with the troupe to of the Marquelle del Grafto Captaine generall of the horiemen.

Vinto this famous expedition and presupposed victory, many pocentates, Princes, and honorable personages hed themselves : out of Spaine the Prince of Melio, called the Duke of Pastrana, and taken to be the Son of one Ruggomes de Silva, but in very deed accompted among the number of King Thilips bale fons, Alfo the Marquelle of Bargrane, ont of the lons of Archiduke Ferdinand and Philippa Welfera. Vefpafian Gonfaga of the family of Mantua, being for chiualiy a man of great renowne, and herecofore Vice-roy in Spaine. Item John Medices, bate ion vnto the Duke of Florence. At length when as the Erench King about the end of May fignified unto her Maieffie in plaine Her Maieffies 20 teatmes that the should stand upon her guard, because he was now certainly enformed, that there was like preparations was to dangerous an invation imminent upon her Realine, that he feared much, leaft all her land and fea-forces would befufficient to withit and it, &c. then began the Queenes Maiettie more carefully to gather her forces together, and to furnish her own ships of warre, and the principall ships of her subjects, with Souldiers, weapons, and other necessary promison. The greatest and strongest thips of the whole Name the lent wato Plummonth, under the conduct of the right honorable Lord Charles Howard, Lord high Admirall of England, &c. Vinder whom the renowned Knight Sir Francis Drake was appointed Vice admirall. The number of their ships was about an hundreth. The leffer thips being 30, or 40, in number, and under the conduct of the Lord Henry Seimer were commanded to lie betweene Doner and Caleis.

30 On land likewise throughout the whole realme, souldiers were mustered and trained in all pla- Her. Mais flies ces, and were committed vnto the most resolute and faithfull captaines. And whereas it was com! Land success monly given out, that the Spaniard having once writed himfelfe vnto the Duke of Parma, ment to inuade by the river of Thames, there was at Tilburie in Effex, over-against Gravefend, a might's army encamped; and on both fides of the river fortifications were erected, according to the prefeription of Frederike Genebelli an Italian enginier. Likewife there were certaine thipsbrought to make a Bridge, though it were very late firit. Vnto the faid Armie came in proper perion the Queenes most rotall Maiestie, representing Tompris that Scitbian warlike Princeste, or rather diuine Pallas her felte. Alfo there were other fuch armiesteuied in England.

And Roman. fome of them were fent vnto other places, to wit, vnto fundry Bilhops and Noblemen, where they were kept from endangering the state of the common wealth, and of her facred Maiestie, who of her most gracious clemency gaue expresse commandement, that they should be intreated with all humani ie and friendship.

The Provinces of Holland, Zeland, &c. giving credit vnto their intelligence out of Spaine, made The preparation preparation to defend themselves : but because the Spanis thips were described voto them to be on orther men to huge, they relied partly upon the shallow and dangerous Seas all along their coasts. Wherefore ted Promuces. they stood most in doubt of the Duke of Parma, his small and flat-bottomed ships. Howbest they had all their thips of warre to the number of nincie and aboue, in a readinesse for all alleves : the 50 greater part whereof were of 4 small borthen, as being more meete to faile upon their Rivers and shallow Seas; and with these ships they belieged all the hauens in Flanders, beginning at the mouth of Scheld, or from the towne of Lillo, and holding on to Greneling, and almost voto Calein, and fortified all their Sea-townes with strong garritons. Against the Spanish streets arrived, they had provided five and twenty of thirty good ships, committing the government of them viito Admirall Lorch, whom they commanded to inine himfelie unto the Lord Henry Seymer, lying betweene Douer and Cales. And when as the forefaid thips (whereof the greater part belieged the haven of Dunkerke) were driven by tempest into Zeland, luftin of Naffan the Admirall of Zeland Supplied that iquadron with fine and thirty shops, being of no great burthen, but excellently furnished with Guns, Mariners and Souldiers in great

Three were upon the coast of Baien in France, by the affistance and courage of one Danid Gum. an English Captine (whom the French and Turkish flaues aided in the fame enterprile) vtterly dilabled and vanqui hed; one of the three being first ouercome, which conquered the two other, with the flaughter of their Gouernour and fouldiers, and among the rest of Don Diego de Mandrana. with fundry others : and to those flaues arrived in France with the three Gallies, fet themselves at libertie.

The Nauie having refreshed themselves at the Groine, and receiving daily commandement from the King to haften their journie, horfed up failes the 11 day of July, and fo holding on their course till the 10, of the same moneth, they came then vnto the mouth of the narrow Seas or English channell, From whence (thriking their failes in the meane featon) they diffratched certain of their imaliships voto the Duke of Parma. At the same time the Spanish Fleete was escried by an Englifb Pinnace, Captaine whereof was Mafter Thomas Fleming, after they had beene aduertifed of the Spaniards expedition by their footes and effizis, which having ranged along the coath of Spaine, were lately returned home into Plimmoth for a new fupply of victuals and other necessitaries, who confidering the forelaid tempest, were of opinion that the Nauie being of late disperfed and toffed vp and downe the maine Ocean, was by no meanes able to performe their intended Voyage. Moreouer, the Lord Charles Howard, Lord high Admirall of England, had received Letters from the Court, fignifying vnto him, that her Maiefty was advertised that the Spanife Fleete would not come forth; nor was tobe any longer expected for, and therefore, that vpon her Maietties commandement hee must fend backe foure of her tallest and strongest Ships vn-In Chartem

The very next day, being the 20. of July about high noone, was the Spanib Fleet escried by the English, which with a South-west winde came sailing along, and passed by Plimmouth; in which regard (according to the judgement of many skilfull Nauigamercy to Eng. tors) they greatly ouershot themselves, whereas it had beene more commodious for them to have land For had faied themifelues there, confidering that the Englifbmen being as yet unprouided, greatly relied vpon their owne forces, and knew not the effate of the Spanifo Nauie. Moreouer, this was the 40 most convenient Port of all others, where they might with greater security have beene adverti-Name hadea fed of the English forces, and how the commons of the land stood affected, and might have stirred up fome mutinie, fo that hither they should have bent all their puissance, and from hence the Duke of Parma might more easily have conveied his Ships. But this they were prohibited to doe by the King and his Counfell, and were expresly commanded to vnite themselves vnto the fouldiers and thips of the faid Dake of Parma, and fo to bring their perpose to effect. Which was thought to be the most easte and direct course, for that they imagined that the English and Durch men would be veterly daunted and dismaied thereat, and would each man of them retire vinto his owne Prounce or Port for the defence thereof, and transporting the Armie of the Duke under the protection of their huge Nauie, they might inuade England. It is reported that the chiefe 50 commanders in the Nauy, and those which were more skilfull in nauigation, to wit, John Martines de Ricalde, Diego Flores de Valdee, and divers others, found fault that they were bound vnto fo itrict directions and inftructions, because that in such a case many particular accidents ought to concurre and to be respected at one and the same instant, that is to fay, the opportunitie of the winde, weather, time, tide, and ebbe, wherein they might faile from Flanders to England, Oftentimes alio the darknesse and light, the situation of places, the depths and shoulds were to be considered : all which especially depended vpon the conveniency of the windes, and were by so much the more dangerous. But it feemed that they were enjoyned by their Commission to ancre neere vnto, or about Caleis, whither the Duke of Parma with his ships and all his warlike prouifion was to refort, and while the English and Spanish great thins were in the midft of their con- 60 flict, to passe by, and to land his fouldiers upon the Downes. The Spanish Captines reported that they were determined first to have entred the River of Thames, & thereupon to have passed with fmall thips up to London, supposing that they might easily win that rich and flourishing Cicle, being but meanely fortified and inhabited with Citizens not accustomed to the wars, who durit

The day following, which was the 21.0f Iuly, the English Ships approached within Musket The 21.0f Iuly that of the Spanish: at what time the Lord Charles Howard most hotly and valiantly discharged his Ordnance upon the Spanish Vice-admirall. The Spanisrds then well perceiving the nimbleneffe of the English ships in discharging upon the enemy on all fides, gathered themselves close into the forme of an halfe Moone, and flackned their failes, leaft they bould outgoe any of their company. And while they were proceeding on in this manner, one of their great Galliades was to furioutly battered with thot, that the whole Nanie was faine to come vo rounder together for the fafegard thereof .: whereby it came to passe that the principal! Galleon of Simil (wherein Don Pedro de Valdez, Va (ques de Silna, Alenzo de Sayas, and other Noble men were embarqued) falling foule of another thip, had her fore-maft broken, and by that meanes was not able to keepe way with the Spanish Fleete, neither would the faid Fleete stay to succour it, but I fe the distresfed Galeon behinds. The Lord Admirall of England, when hee faw this Ship of Valdez, and thought the had beene voide of Marriners and Souldiers, taking with him as many thips as he Gileon for

Francis Drake (who was not with itanding appointed to beare out his Lanterne that night) was giving of chale vinto five great Hulkes which had separated them selves from the Spanish Fleete: but finding them to be Easterlings, hee difmissed them. The Lord Admirall all that night following the Spanish Lanterne instead of the English, found himselfe in the morning to be in the midft of his enemies Fleete, but when he perceived it, he clenly conveied himfelfe out of that great danger.

Valdez comming vnto Drake, and humbly kiffing his hand, protefting vnto him, that he and his to had refolued to die in battell, had they not by good fortune fallen into his power, whom they knew to be right curteous and gentle, and whom they had heard by generall report to be most fa- Virtus in heft nourable vnto his vanquished foe : insomuch, that he said it was to be doubted whether his ene- landanda. my had more cause to admire and loue him for his great, valiant, and prosperous exploits, or to dread him for his fingular felicity and wifdome, which ever attended upon him in the wars, and by the which he had attained vnto to great honor. With that Drake embraced him, and gaue him very honorable entertainment, feeding him at his owne table, and lodging him in his Cabbin. Here Valdez began to recount vnto Drake the forces of all the Spanift Fleete, and how foure mighty Gallies were separated by tempest from them : and also how they were determined first to baue put into Plimmouth haven, not expecting to be repelled thence by the English flips, which they thought could by no meanes withitland their impregnable forces, perfwading themfolies that by o meanes of their huge Fleete, they were become Lords and commanders of the maine Ocean. For which cause they margeiled much how the Englishmen in their small Ships durst approach within musket that of the Spaniards mighty woodden Caftles, gathering the wind of them, with many other such like attempts. Immediately after, Valdez and his Company (being a man of principal) authority in the Spanil Fleet, and being descended of one and the same family with that Valdez, which in the yeere 1574.befieged Leiden in Holland) were fent captines into England. There were in the faid thip 55 thousand Duckers in ready monie of the Spanift Kings gold, which the fouldiers merrily thared among themselves.

The same day was set on fire one of their greatest ships, being Admirall of the squadron of Gui-60 pufco, and being the ship of Michael de Oquendo Vice-admirall of the whole Fleete, which contained great flore of Gunpowder, and other warlike proution. Voon tueiday, which was the 23.0f July, the Nauy being come ouer against Portland, the wind began to turne Northerly, infomuch that the Spannards had a fortunate and fit gale to inuade the Englifb. But the Englishmen hauing leifer and nimbler ships, recourred againe the vantage of the to winde from the Spaniards, whereat the Spaniards feemed to be more incensed to fight then before, But when the English fleet had continually and without intermition from morning to night heaten and battered them with all their shot both great and small; the Spaniards vniting themfelues, gathered their whole Fleete close together into a roundeli, to that it was apparant that they ment not as yet to inuade others, but onely to defend themselues, & to make hatte with the place preferibed vnto them, which was neere vnto Dunkerk, that they might toyne forces with the Duke of Parma, who was determined to have proceeded fecretly with his small thips under the shadow and protection of the great ones, and to had intended circumspectly to performe the

This was the most furious and bloudy skirmish of all, in which the Lord Admirall of England 20 continued fighting amidit his enemies Fleete, and feeing one of his Captaines a farre off, he ipake Geptaine Fen- unto him in these words: Ob George, what doest thou? The English Nauy in the meane while increased, whereunto out of all Hauens of the Realme resorted ships and men : for they all with one accord came flocking thither as vnto a set field, where immortall fame and glory was to be attained, and faithfull service to be performed vnto 30 their Prince and Countrey. In which number there were many great and honorable personages, as namely, the Earle of Oxford, of Northumberland, of Cumberland, of c. with many Knights and Genelemen : to wit, Sir Thomas Cecill, Sir Robert Cecill, Sir Walter Raleigh, Sir William Hatten, Sir Horatio Palanicini, S. r Heury Brooke, Sir Robert Carem, Sir Charles Blant; Mafter Ambrofe Willonobbie, Malter Henry Nowell, Malter Thomas Gerard, Malter Henry Dudley, Malter Edward Darcie, Mafter Arthur Gorge, Mafter Thomas Woodbowfe, M. And to it came to paffe that the number of the English thips amounted vito an hundreth: which when they were come before Douer, were increased to an hundred and thirty, being notwithstanding of no proportionable bignesse to encounter with the Spaniards, except two or three and twenty of the Queenes greater fhips, which onely; by reason of their presence, bred an opinion in the Spaniards 40 minds concerning the power of the English Fleet : the Marriners and Souldiers whereof were esteemed to be twelve thousand.

The 24 of Iuly

The foure and twentie of July, when as the Sea was calme, and no winde flirring, the fight was onely betweene the foure great Galleaffes and the English thips, which being rowed with Oares, had great vantage of the English thips, which not withflanding for all that would not be forced to yeelde, but discharged their chaine shot to cut asunder their Cables and Cordage of the Gallesfles, with many other fuch Stratagems. They were now constrained to fend their men on land for a new supply of Gunpowder, whereof they were in great scarcitie, by reason they had Wantof Pow- fo frankly frent the greater part in the former conflicts. The fame day, a Counfell being affembled, it was decreed that the English Fleete (hould be deuided into foure equidrons : the principall 50 whereof was committed voto the Lord Admirall : the fecond to Sir Francis Drake : the third to

English; for they bestowed each on other the broad sides, and mutually discharged all their

Ordnance; being within one hundred or an hundred and twenty yards one of another. At length the Spaniards hoifed up their failes, and againe gathered themfelues vo close into the forme of a roundell. In the meane while Captaine Frobifber had engaged himfelfe into a most dangerous conflict. Whereupon the Lord Admirall comming to fuccour him, found that hee had valiantly and discreetly behaved himfelfe, and that he had wifely and in good time given over the fight, because that after so great a batterie he had sustained no damage. For which cause the day tollowing. being the fixe and twenty of Inly, the Lord Admirall rewarded him with the order of The 26.0 Inly Knighthood, together with the Lord Thomas Howard, the Lord Sheffield, Mafter John Hawkins, and others. The large day the Lord Admirall received intelligence from New hanen in France, by certaine Guillant fear-d of his Pinnaces, that all things were quit in France, and that there was no preparation of fent Tacconq. A. ding aide vnto the Spaniards, which was greatly feared from the Guiffan faction; and from the Learners ; but there was a falle rumour foread all about, that the Spaniards had conquered England.

The feuen and twentieth of July, the Spaniards about the fun-fetting were come oder-against The ar of July, Doner, and rode at ancre within the fight of Caleis, intending to hold on for Dunkerk, expecting The Spaniards there to joyne with the Duke of Parma his forces, without which they were able to doe little or ancrebelore nothing. Likewife the English Fleete following vp hard vpon them, antred inft by them within Caleis. coluening-flor. And here the Lord Honry Seymer united himselfe unto the Lord Admirall with his fleet of 20. hips which rode before the mouth of Thames.

As the Spanish Nauie therefore lay at ancre, the Duke of Medina ferr certaine Meffengers vnto the Duke of Parma, with whom your that occasion many Noblemen and Gentlemen went to retrefit themselves on land; and among the reft the Prince of Assolibeing accounted the Kings bafe fon, and a very proper and towardly yong Gentleman, to his great good went on thoate, who was by to much the more fortunate, in that he had not opportunity to returne on boord the fame thip out of which he was departed, because that in returning nome it was cast away vpon fortune. the Irifb coast, withall the persons contained therein. The Duke of Parma being advertised of the Spanih Fleetes arrivall upon the coast of England, made all the haste hee could to be prefent himselfe in this expedition for the performance of his charge : vainely perswading himselfe that now by the meanes of Cardinall Allen, hee thould be crowned King of England, and for that cause he hadresigned the Gouernment of the Low Countries unto Count Mansfeld the elder.

the Spanish Ficete was now passed by: neither durst any of his ships in the meane space come forth to affift the faid Spanish Fleet for feare of five and thirty warlike thips of Holland and Zeo land, which there kept watch and ward under the conduct of the Admirall lustin of Nasan. The forefaid five and thirty thips were furnished with most cunning Mariners and old expert Souldi- States Fleets, ers, among It the which were twelve hundred Musketeers, whom the States had choicn out of all their Garrisons, and whom they knew to have beene heretofore experienced in Sea-fights. This Nauie was given especially in charge not to suffer any ship to come out of the Hauen, nor to permit any Zabraes, Pataches or other small vessels of the Spanish Fleete (which were more likely to aide the Dunkerkers) to enter thereinto, for the greater thips were not to be feared by reason of the shallow Sea in that place. Howbeit the Prince of Parma his forces being as yet voready, En life Hiftswere not come on board his ships, onely the English Fagitiues, being seven hundred in number, missied trainers winder the conduct of Sir William Stanley, came in fit time to have beene embarked, because they hoped to give the first affault against England. The residue shewed themselves vowilling and loath to depart, because they saw but a few Marriners, who were by constraint drawne into this expedition, and also because they had very bare prouision of Bread, Drinke, and other necessary vi-Quals. Moreover, the ships of Holland and Zeland stood continually in their tight, threatning shot and Powder, and many incommeniences vnto them: for feare of which ships; the Mariners and Sea-men fecretly withdrew themselves both day and night, least that the Duke of Parma his Souldiers should compell them by maine force to goe on boord, and to breake through the Hollanders Fleete, which all of them judged to be impeffible, by reason of the straightnesse troupes, armour, and warlike prouision, and with their forces so vanted, should inuade England: or while the English Fleete were builed in fight against the Spanish, thould enter vpon any part of the coast, which he thought to be most convenient. Which invasion (as the Captines afterward confelled) the Duke of Parma thought first to have attempted by the River of Thames: voon the bankes whereof having at his first arrival landed twenty or thirty thouland of his principall Souldiers, he supposed that he might easily have wen the Citie of London; both because his imall thirs should have followed and affifted his Land-forces, and also for that the Citie it felfe was but meanely fortified and easie to ouercome, by reason of the Citizens delicacie and discontinuance from the warres.

When as therefore the Spansh Fleete rode at ankerbefore Caleis, to the end they might con- to fult with the Duke of Parma what was best to be done according to the Kings commandement. and the prefent efface of their affaires, and had now (as we will afterward declare) purposed vpon the second of August, heing Friday, with one power and consent to have put their intended bufinelle in practife; the Lord Admirall of England being admonished by her Maiesties Lettere from the Court, thought it most expedient either to drive the Spanish Fleet from that place, or at Sca-ftragagem least wife to give them the encounter; and for that cause (according to her Maiesties prescription) he tooke forthwith eight of his worlf and bateit ships which came next to hand, and disburchening them of all things which fremed to be of any value, filled them with Gunpowder, Pitch, Brimitone, and with other combultible and hery matter; and charging all their Ordnance with powder, bullets and itones, and fent the faid thips vpon the 28. of July, being Sunday, about two of the clocke after midnight, with the winde and tide against the Spanish Fleete: which when they had proceeded a good space, being for saken of the Pilots, and fet on fire, were directly carri-

Vpon the 29.0f July in the morning, the Spanifo Fleete after the forefaid tumule, having arranged themselves againe into order, were, within fight of Greveling, most bravely and furrously encountered by the Englift, where they once againe got the winde of the Spaniards : who fuffered themselues to be deprived of the commodity of the place in Caleis rode, and of the advantage of the winde neere ento Dunkerk, rather then they would change their array, or leparate their forces now conjoyed and vnited together, flanding onely vpon their defence. And albeit there were many excellent and warlike fin ps in the English fleet, yet learle were there 22.0r 23.2mong them all which matched 90.0f the Spanifo thips in bignetle, or could conveniently affault them. Wherefore the Englif fings wing their prerogative of nimble flirrage, whereby they could 60 turne and wield themiclus with the winde which way they lifted, came oftentimes very neereypon the Spaniards, and charged them to foresthat now and then they were but a Pikes length at funder; and fo continually giving them one broad fide after another, they diffatched all their floe both great and small vpon them spending one whole day from morning till night in that violence

kinde of conflict, vitill tuch time as powder and bullets failed them. In regard of which want they thought it convenient not so puritie the Spansards any longer, because they had many great vantages of the English, namely for the extraordinary bignesse of their ships, and also for that they were to neerely contoyned, and kept together in to good array, that they could by no meanes be fought withall one to one. The English thought therefore, that they had right well acquitted themselves, in chasing the Spaniards first from Caleis, and then from Dunkerk, and by that means to have hindered them from joyning with the Duke of Parma his forces, and getting the winde of them, to have driven them from their owne coafts.

CHAP.II. Great Dantages. Enemy confounded. Goods unladen.

The Spaniards that day tuitained great loffe and damage, having many of their thips thot thoto row and thorow, and they discharged likewise great store of Ordinance against the English; who indeede fultained fome hinderance, but not comparable to the Soundards loffe; for they, loft not any one thip or perion of account. For very diagent is quificion being made, the Englishmee all that time wherein the Spanish Nauie failed vpon, their Seas; are not found to have wanted about one hundreth of their people: albeit Sir F. Drakes thip was pierced with thot aboue forty times, and his very cabben was twife that thorow, and about the conclusion of the fight, the bed of a certaine to the said Gentlemanlying weary thereupon, was taken quite from under him with the force of a Bullet. Likewife, as the Earle of Northumberland and Sir Charles Blunt were at dinner vpon a time, the Bullet of a Demi-culturing brake thorow the middelt of their Cabbin, touched their feete, and throoke downe two of the Handers by, with many fuch accidents befalling the English thips, which it were tedious to rehearfe. Whereupon it is most apparant, that G.d miraculously preferned the English Nation. For the Lord Admirall wrote vito her Maietty, that in all humaine reason, and according to the judgement of all men (euery circumitance being duely confidered) the Englishmen were not of any luch force, whereby they might, without a miracle, dare once to approach within the fight of the Spanish Fleete: infomuch, that they freely afcribed all the honour of their victory voto God, who had confounded the enemy, and had brought his counfels to none effect.

The same day the Spanish ships were so battered with English shot, that that very night and the Three Spanish day following, two or three of them funke right downe : and among the reft a certain great flup flups funke in of Bifeay, which Captaine Croffe affaulted, which perifhed even in the time of the conflicts to that to very few therein eleaped drowning; who reported that the Gouernors of the fame thip flew one another you the occasion following : one of them which would have yeelded the ship was suddealy flame; the brother of the flame party in revenge of his death flew the murtherer, and in the

In the other Galeon, called the Saine Massbew, was embarked Don Diego Pimentelli another Camp-mafter and Colonell of two and thirty bands, being brother vinto the Marquelle of Tammares, with many other Gentlemen and Captaines. Their thip was not very great, but exceeding flrong, for of a great number of Bullets which had batterd her . there were fearce twenty wherewith the was pierced or hure: her upper worke was of force fifficient to beare off a Musket that : this thip was that thorow and pierced in the fight before Greneling : infomuch that the leakage of the water could not be stopped : whereupon the Dake of Medina fent his great skiffe vnto the Gouernour thereof, that he might faue himfelle and the principal persons, shat were 50 in his ship : which he, vpon a hault courage, refused to doe : wherefore the Duke charged him to faile next voto himselfe; which the night following hee could not performe, by reason of the abundance of water which entered his thip on all fides; for the audiding, whereof, and so face his thip from finking he caused fitty men continually to Libour at the Pump though it were to small purpole. And feeing himfelfe thus forfaken and teparated from his Admirall, he endeuored what no could to attaine vnto the coast of Flanders; where being efficed by foure or five men of war, which had their flation affigned them upon the same coast: he was admonished to yeeldehimselfe vino them; which he refused to doe, was strongly assulted by them altogether, & his ship being pierced with many bullets, was brought into far worle case then before, & forty of his souldiers were flain. By which excremity he was enforced at length to yeelde himtelfe vnto Peter Banderduefs 60 and other Captaine, which brought him and his thip into Zeland; and that other thip alfolait before mentioned : which both of them, immediatly after the greater and better part of their goods were voladen. funke right downe. For the memory of this exploit, the foresaid Captain Banderduels caufed a Banner of one of these shups to be set up in the great Church of Leiden in Holland, which is of to great a length, that being tailed to the very roofe, it teached downe to the ground.

And so it came to passe, that the fourth of August, with great danger and industry, the English arrived at Harmich; for they had beene toll d vp and downe with the 4.0t Aug. a mighty tempest for the space of two or three dayes together, which it is likely did great hure voto the Spanift fleet, being (as I fain before) to maimed and battered. The English now going on shoare, provided themselves forth with of Victuals, Gunpowder, and other things expedient, that they might be ready at all affayes to entertaine the Spanish fleete, if it chanced any more to 10

The Spaniards feeing now that they wanted foure or fine thousand of their people, and having divers maimed and ficke persons, and likewise having lost ten or twelve of their principall ships, they confulted among themselves, what they were best to doe, being now escaped our of the hands of the English, because their victuals failed them in like fort, & they began alio to want cables, cordage, anker, masts, failes, and other naual furniture, and otterly despaired of the Duke of confult to faile Parma his affitance (who verily hoping & vndoubtedly expeding the return of the Spanifo fleet, round about was continually occupied about his great preparation, commanding abundance of ankers to be 40 Scotland & Ire made, and other necessary furniture for a Nauy to be prouided) they thought it good at length, so to set and the set of the winde should lerue them, to set ha compasse about Seesland and Ireland, and so to te-

For they well understood, that commandement was given thorowout all Scotland, that they should not have any succour or affiftance there. Neither yet could they in Norway supply their wants. Wherefore, hairing taken certaine Scottifh and other filherboats, they brought the men on boord their owne ships, to the end they might be their guides and Pilots. Fearing also least their fresh water should taile them, they cast all their horses and mules ouer-boord; and so touching no where vpon the coaft of Scotland, but being carried with a fresh gale betweene the Oreader and Faar-Istes, they proceeded farre North even vnto 61 degrees of latitude, being distant from any 50 land at the leaft 40.leagues. Here the Duke of Medina, Generall of the Fleet, commanded all his followers to shape their course for Biscay : and he himselfe with twenty or five and twenty of his thips which were best prouided of fresh water and other necessaries, holding on his course ouer the maine Ocean, returned fafely home. The refidue of his ships being about torty in number, and committed vnto his Vice-admirall, fell neerer with the coast of Ireland, intending their course for Cape Clare, because they hoped there to get fresh water, and to refresh themselves on land. But after they were driven with many contrary windes, at length, voon the second of September, The hipwrack they were cast by a tempest arising from the South-west vpon divers parts of Ireland, where many of the parado of their thips perished And amongst others, the ship of Michael de Oquendo, which was one of the great Gallioffes : and two great thips of Venise allo, namely, la Ratta and Belanzara, with other 36 60 or 31. Moreover, there arrived at Newhanen in Worm andy, being by tempest inforced so to doe, one of the tours great Galliafles, whereby they found the thips with the Spanish women which followed Of 124 thipsof the Fleet at their letting forth. Two ships also were call away vpon the coast of Norway, one of the Sounds dees them being of a great burthen; howbeit all the persons in the said great ship were saued : info- there returned much that of 134-thips, which fet faile out of Portugal, there returned home 53, onely, finall and home but 53, great : namely of the foure Gallialies but one, and but one of the foure Gallies. Of the 91. great Gilleons and Hulkes there were milling (8. and 23. returned: of the Pataches and Zabraes 17. were miffing, and 18 returned home. In briefe, there were miffing 81. fhips, in which number were Galligles, Gallies Galeons, and other welfels both great and small. And amongst the 3. ships to remaining, those also are reckoned which returned home before they came into the English channell. Two Galeons of those which were returned, were by misfortune burnt as they rode in the haven; and fuch like mishaps and many other undergoe. Of 30000, persons which went in this expedition, there perished (according to the number and proportion of the ships) the greater and better part; and many of them which came home, by reason of the toiles& inconneniences which they fultained in this voiage, died not long after their arrivall. The Dake of Medina immediately D. of Medina woon his returne was depoted from his authority, commanded to his private house, and forbidden to repaire vnto the Court; where he could hardly fatisfie or yield a reason vnto his malicious enemies and backbiters. Into England (as we faid before) Don Pedro de Valdez, a man of fingular experience, and greatly honoured in his country, was led captine, being accompanied with Don Vajques de Silna, Don Alonzo de Sayas, and others.

Likewise vpon the Scottish Westerne Isles of Lewis, and Ila, and about Cape Cantre vpon the 30 maine land, there were cast away certaine Spanib Ships, out of which were faued divers Cap-taines and Gentlemen, and almost foure hundred fouldiers, who for the most part, after their Inipwracke, were brought vnto Edenborough in Scotland, and being miserably needy and naked, were there cloathed at the liberalitie of the King and the Merchants, and afterward were fecretly fhipped for Spaine; but the Scottift Fleete wherein they passed touching at Tar- Spaniards vitis mouth on the coast of Norfolke, were there stated for a time untill the Counsels pleasure was tied. knowne; who in regard of their manifold miferies, though they were enemies, winked at Howbeit there was brought prisoner out of Ireland, Don Alon-AO 30 de Lucon, Colonel of two and thirty bands, commonly called a Terza of Naples: together with Rodorigo de Lassand two others of the family of Cordona, who were committed vnto the cultody of Six Horatio Palanicini, that Monfieur de Teligny the fon of Monfieur de la None (who being taken in fight neere Antwerpe, was detained prisoner in the Castle of Turney) might be ransomed Southers general for them by way of exchange. To conclude, there was no famous nor worthy family in all Spain, loffe. which in this expedition loit not a fon, a brother, or a kinfman.

For the perpetuall memory of this matter, the Zelanders caufed new coine of Silver and Broffe New coines to be stamped: which on the one side contained the armes of Zeland, with this inscription; stamped for the to be stamped: which on the one had contained the armost of certaine great ships, memory of the GLORY TO GOD ONELY: and on the other side, the pictures of certaine great ships, memory of the with these words; THESPANISH FLEET: and in the circumference about the ships, IT CAME, WENT, AND WAS. So went and was vanquifted this yeere; for which, glory be given to God onely. Likewife they coined another kinde of mony; vpon the one fide whereof was reprefented a ship fleeing, and a ship finking : on the other fide, foure men making prayers and giving thankes vnto God vpon their knees; with this fentence : Man purpofeth, God diffoseth, 1,88. Allo, for the lasting memory of the same matter, they have stamped in Holland divers such coines, according to the custome of the ancient Romans. Also other coines were stamped with a Fleet flying with full faile, and inferibed ; Venit , Vedit , Fugit ; It came, faw, fled : others with the fired fhips, and the fleet in confusion, the word DVX FOEMINAFACTI.

Likewife fuch folerane daies of supplication were observed throughout the vnited Prouinces.

Alto a while after the Spanish Fleet was departed, there was in England, by the commandement of her Maiefty, and in the vnited Provinces, by the direction of the States, a folemne feiliwall day publikely appointed, wherein all persons were enjoyned to refore vnto the Church, and there to render thankes and praifes vnto God; and the Preachers were commanded to exhort the people thereunto. The foresaid solemnity was observed upon the 19.0f November : which day was wholly spent in Preaching, praying, giving thankes, with the accustomed solemnities of IQ

Bonfires, Singing, Ringing, and other wonted expressions of publike iov. Likewife, the Queenes Maielty her felfe, imitating the ancient Romans, rode into London in eriumph, in regard of her owne and her subjects glorious deliuerance. For being attended voon very folemnly by all the principall effates and officers of her Realme, the was carried thorow her Gid Citie of London in a triumphant chariot, and in robes of triumph, from her Palace vnto the Cathedrall Church of Saint Paul, out of the which the enfignes and colours of the vanquified Spaniards hung displaced. And all the Citizens of London in their Liveries flood on either fide the street, by their seuerall Companies, with their Ensignes and Banners : and the streets were hanged on both fides with Blew cloath, which, together with the forefaid Banners, yeelded a very trately and gallant prospect. Her Maiesty being entered into the Church, together with her 20 Cleroy and Nobles gaue thankes vnto God, and caused a publike Sermon to be preached before her at Pauls Croffe; wherein none other argument was handled, but that praise, honour, and glory might be rendered vinto God, and that Gods name might be extolled by thankfgining. And with her own Princely voyce the most Christianly exhorted the people to doe the fame : whereupon the people with a loud acclamation wished her a most long and happy life, to the confusion of her foes. The Lord Admirall had a penfion affigned for his good feruice.

He had beene employed to the faid King, whiles the Spanish Fleet housed on the coast, to gratulate with him in the Queenes name, for his alacrity in the common cause, and to 30 obtaine his promise of aide, if the Spaniards landed in Scotland; and to put him in minde how ambitiously the Spaniard lought to I wallow in all Britaine, viging the Pope to Excommunicate him fo to ftrip him of Scotland, and quit his succession in England; to admonish him of the threats of Mendoza and the Popes Nuntio; that therefore he should be very wary of the Papists in Scotland. He answered conceitedly, amongst other speeches, that be bepedfor no other benefit from the Spaniard, then that which Polyphemus had promifed Vlyffes, namely, that when the rest were denoured, be frould be fwallowed laft.

THat upon the thirtieth of July, without seeing any sayle of the Enemies in the Sea, her came to the Channell, fixe leagues from Plimouth : where understanding the Enemies were , bee 240 ha hasted till thered together and let in order all the Fleet: and Jayling the first of August, there was discourred some Sayles of the Enemies , the which the second day were numbred to bee threescore Sayle of which the Duke tooke the wind, and paffed without any fight, although he presented the same to them how best they becan to floot at the Rearward : but the Duke in the Galleon S. Martin, fet the Prom of his Ship against the big gelt of the Enemies, the which being succoursed by twentie others, fled away of this fight and first encounter, there was sunke three Galeasses, and foure mightie Galeons of the Queenes there was burnt of ones by negligence of a Gunner, the Admirall of Oquendo, and the Enemies tooke the chiefe Shis of Don Pedro de Valdez, which being entangled with others under his charge : was left without to Tackle, and so neere the Enemies, that shee could not be succoured by others.

With this, our Fleet feeing that the Enemy in enery point did five from gining battell, they failed with Some salme weather, and the Enemies after them, Shooting alwayes at the Rearward, until the Senenth. that our Fleet ancored in the Road of S. John, betwiet Calleis and Bollin, nine leagues from Dunkerk. and the Enemies did the libe, the neerest they could to England.

The niebs being approached she Enemies got up their Ankers to get wind, and not to suffer our Shae to see out of the Road to Sea, because they had trimmed eight Ships of fire, which with the current of the water . Should have put themselves amongst our Ships to have burnt them. But my Lord the Duke, forelesing the danger preuented them , with commandement that the Ships that were neerest should cut their Cables, and take up the others with a readinesse uncredible : and with this the Enemies pretence was him- 20 dered, and fo got the Sea most branely and with good fortune, that if bee had not done it our Army Sould have beene in an enill case, for in the very place where we left, there was shot off by them out of those fiery Ships, fuch Fires and other Engines , that were sufficient to burne the Sea , much more Ships which are made of Wood and Pitch.

In this departure, the Captaine of the Galeaffes had a great mischance : for getting up her Anker, a Cable fell foule of her Helme, that thee could not follow the rest, which caused one of her sides to be so the that her Ordnance could not play, and fo twentie fine Pennaces came and battered ber, and with all this if the Mariners. Souldiers and Rowers that were in her had not cast them felues into the Seast is holden for certaine, that Don Hugo de Moncada bad defended ber, as he did untillfe came into Caffeis, where at the entrance thereof, be was killed of two (aliner flot, the people on floure defended the Galeaffe, and all 30 that was in ber, and delinered the fame to our Soneraigne Lord the Kings Miniflers.

At this time the Duke had a very franke wind, and the like had the Queenes Fleet : and fo they both paffed by the fight of Dunkerke, informuch as they on Land buen the Gallion S. Martin, and others that went fighting with the English Army, and in this order they went till the tweffit.

Afterwards they write, that their came into Calleis a Ship, which faith, that the twelfth day they did fee the two Fleets together in fight : another which came afterwards, faid he had feene some Ships footled and torne, and from them they threw out their bag gage which they faned in Boats, which are neth they were Ships of the Enemies, for that our men had no place to faue them felnes, nor there were none of them arrived into Flanders, which was their place of recurne.

Ot of England was adulfeginen, that on the thirteenth arrived lifteene of the Queenes Ships, and they faid that the Gallem S.Martin, wherin my Lord the Duke is (whom God preferse) had encountred with Drake, and had grappled his Ship, and captived his Person, and other Noble Englishmen, and taken other fifteene Ships, befide others that were distreffed, and the Duke with his Fleet followed his way io Scotland, because the wind was not come about.

With these newes his Maiesty resteth very much contented, and cansed them to be sent to the Empresse, by the bands of Francisco Ydiaquez, bis Secretary of Estate.

A Discourse of the Portugali Voyage, A. 1589. Sir I o HM NORRIS and Sir FRANCIS DRAKE Generalls, written (as is thought) by Colonell ANTONIE WINGFIELD, imployed in the fame Voyage, formerly published by his friend to whom it was written : and here abbreniated.

Auing determinately purposed to put on this habite of a Souldier, I grew doubt- 60 full whether to employ my time in the warres of the Low-countries, which are in auxiliarie manner maintained by her Maiestie, or to follow the fortune of this voyage, which was an aduenture of her and many honourable personages, in retienge of vinlupportable wrongs offered vato the effate of our Country by the

Castilian King: in arguing whereof, I finde that by how much the Challenger is repured before the Derendant, by so much is the journey to bee preferred before thole defensive Warres. For had the Duke of Parma his turne beene to defend, as it was his good for une to inuade; from whence could have proceeded that glorious honour which thefe late warres have laid ypon him, or what could have beene faid more of him, then of a Respondent (though never so valiant) in a private Duell ? Even that he hath done no more then by his honour he was tied vnto. For the gains of one Towne, or any small defeat grueth more renowne to the Ailulant, then the defence of a Countrey, or the withstanding of twentie encounters, can yeeld any man who is bound by his place to guard the fame : whereof as well the particulars of our age, especially in the Spanier d, as the reports of former Hiltories may affure vs, which have ftill layed the fame of all warres upon the Inuader. And doe not ours in thefe dayes line obfcured in Flanders, either not having wherewithall to manage any warre, or not putting on Armes, but to defend themselves when the enemy shall procure them ! Whereas in this short time of our Adventure, we have won A brieferea Town by Escalade, battered and aliaulted another, ouerthrowne a mightie Princes power in the hearfall of the Field, landed our Army in three feuerall places of his Kingdome, marched feuen dayes in the heart Exclip exploirs of his Country, lyen three nights in the Suburbs of his principall Citie, beaten his forces into the in this voyage, Gates thereof, and poff-ffed two of his frontier Forts , as shall in discourse thereof more particularly appeare, Bu: our Army, which hath not coft her Maiestie much about the third part of one yeeres expences in the Low-countries , hath already fpoyled a great part of the prouision hee had made at the Groine of all forts, tor a new voyage into England; burnt three of his Ships, whereof one was the second in the last yeeres expedition, called S. Inan de Colorado; taken from him aboue 150, Peeces of good artillery; cut off more then 60. Hulkes, and 20, French Ships well manned fit and ready to serue him for men of warre against vs , laden for his store with Corne , Victualls, Mafts, Cables and other merchandizes ; flame and taken the principall men of Warre hee had in

shamefully run a: Peniche ; laid along of his best Commander in Lisbon; wherefore I directly conclude that this proceeding is the most fate and necessary way to be held against him, and therefore more importing then the warre in the Low-countries. I doubt not but this voyage hath sufficiently made knowne what they are even vpon their owne dunghill; which, had it bin fet out in fuch fort as it was agreed vpon by their first demand, it might have made our Nation the most glorious people of the world. For hath not the want of eight of the twelue Peeces of Artillery , which were promifed vnto the Aduenture, lost her Maie ity the post fion of the Groine and many other places, as hereafter shall appeare; whose defensible rampiers were greater then our battery (such asit was) cold force : and therefore were left vnattempted ! It was also resoluted to have sent 600, English Horles of the Low-countries, whereof wee had not one, notwithstanding the great charges expended in their transportation hither ; and that may the Army affembled at Puente de Burger thanke God of, as well as the forces of Portugall, who fore-ran vs fix dayes together : Did we not want leuen of the thirteen old Companies, which we should have had from thence; foure of the ten Duteb Companies ; and fix of their men of Warre for the Sea, from the Hollanders: which I may juitly lay wee wanted, in that we might have had so many good Souldiers, so many good ships, and to many able bodies more then wee had? Did there not upon the first thinking of the journey, divers gallant Courtiers put in their names for Adventurers to the sum of 10000. li. who feeing it went forward in good earnest, aduised themselves better, and laid the want of so much money upon the journey Was there not moreouer a round summe of the aduenture fpent in leaving, furnishing, and maintaining three moneths one thousand fine hundred men for the feruice of Berghen, with which Companies the Mutinies of Oftend were suppressed, a seruice of no fmall moment : What mifery the detracting of the time of our fetting out, which should have beene the first of February, did lay vpon vs, too many can witnesse: and what extremitie the want of that months 50 victuals which wee did eat, during the moneth wee lay at Plimonth for wind, might have driven vs vnto, no man can doubt of, that knoweth what men doe line by, had not God given vs in the end a more prosperous wind and shorter passage into Galitia then hath been often seene, where our owne force and fortune remictualled vs largely : of which croffe winds, that held vs two dayes after our going out, the Generalls being weary, thrust to Sea in the same, wifely chufing rather to attend the change thereof there, then by being in Harbour to lofe any part of the better, when it should come by having their men on shoare : in which two dayes twentie five of our Companies shipped in part of the Fleet were scattered from vs , either not being able or willing to double Ulbant.

These burdens layed upon our Generalls before their going out, they have patiently endured, 60 and I thinke they have thereby much enlarged their honour : for nating done thus much with the rali Drake. want of our Artillery, 600. Horie, 3000. Foot, 20000. It, of their adventure, and one moneths victualls of their proportion, what may be consectured they would have done with their full complement : For our instruction against them, who had almost seduced you from the true opinon education and you hold of such men, you shall understand that Generall Norris from his booke was trained up complyments, in the warres of the Admirall of France, and in very young yeeres had charge of men under the Earle of Effex in Ireland : which with what commendations hee then discharged, I leave to the report of them who oblered those services. Vpon the breach betwixt Don John and the States. he was made Colonell Generall of all the English Forces there present, or to come, which he contimued two yeeres : he was then made Marshall of the Field vinder Conte Hobenlo : and after that. Cronstall of the Army in Frifand: at his comming home in the time of Monfieurs government in Flanders, he was made Lord Prefident of Munster in Ireland, which he yet holdeth, from whence within one weere hee was fent for, and fent Generall of the English Forces, which her Majeffie leat then to the Low-countries, which he held till the Eatle of Leicesters going ouer. And he was made Marshall of the Field in England, the enemy being vpon our Coast, and when it was expected the Crowne of England should have beene tried by battell. All which places of Command which never Englishman successively attained vnto in forraine warres, and the high places her Majestie hath thought him worthy of , may suffice to perswade you that hee was not altogether valikely to discharge that he vadertooke.

What fame Generall Drake hath gotten by his journey about the world, by his adventures to the West Indies, and the scourges hee hath laid upon the Spanish Nation, I leave to the Sontherne parts to speake of. But to answere the reports, which have beene given out in repreach of the Actors and Action by fuch as were in the fame : let no man thinke otherwite, but the they, who fearing the caruall accidents of Warre had any purpose of returning, did first adulle of fome occasion that should move them thereunto : and having found any what locuer did thinke it 20 full iently just, in respect of the earnest defire they had to seeke out matter that might colone

Of these there were some, who having noted the late Flemish wars, did find that many young men haue gone over and fafely returned Souldiers within few moneths, in having learned fome words of Art yied in the wars, and thought after that good example to fpend like time among it vs: which being expired they began to quirrell at the great mortalitie that was among t vs. The neelect of diffipline in the Armie, for that men were suffered to bee drunke with the plentie of Wines. The fearlitie of Surgions. The want of carriages for the hurt and ticke : and the penury of victualls in the Campe: It hath beene proued by fluckt examinations of our Muffers, that we were never in our falnelle before our going from Plimenth 11000. Souldiers, nor about 2500. 30 Mariners. It is also enidene that there returned about 6000, of all forts, as appeareth by the feperall paiments made to them fince our comming home. And I have truely thewed you that of thefe numbers very neere three thousand for looke the Armie at the Sea, whereof fome passed into France, and the rest returned home. So as wee never being 13000 in all, and having brought home about fix thousand with vs, you may see how the world hath beene seduced, in beleeuing that we have left 16000. men by ficknelle.

If at home in the eyes of your Indices, Majors, Preachers, and Mafters, and where they pay for query pot they take, they cannot be kept from their liquor : doe they thinke that those base difordered persons whom themselves sent vnto vs, as living at home without rule, who hearing of Wine doe long for it as a daintie that their puries could never reach to an England, and having it 40 there without money even in their houses where they lie and hold their guard, can be kept from being drunke; and once drunke, held in any order or tune, except we had for every drunkard an Officer to attend him ! But who bee they that have run into their diforders ! Euen our newest men, our youngest men, and our idlest men, and for the most part our flouenly prest men, whom the luftices (who have alwayes thought vnworthily of any warre) have fent out as the four and dregs of the Countrey. And those were they, who distempering themselves with their hot Wines, haue brought in that fickneffe, which hath infected honefter men then themfelues. But I hope, as in other places the recourry of the difease, doth acquaint their bodies with the ayre of the Countrey where they be, so the remainder of these which have either recourred, or past without ficknesse will proue most fit for Martiall services.

If we have wanted Surgeons, may not this rather be laid youn the Captaines (who are to proui le for their seuerall Companies) then vpon the Generalls, whole care hath been more generall. And how may it be thought that every Captaine, vpon whom most of the charges of raising their Companies was laid as an aduenture, could provide themselves of all things expedient for a war, which was alwayes wont to be maintained by the purfe of the Prince. But admit enery Captain had his Surgeon : yet were the want of curing neuen beleffe : for our English Surgeons (for the most part) bee vnexperienced in hurts that come by shot because England hath not knowne warres but of late, from whole ignorance proceeded this discomfort, which I hope will warne those that hereafter goe to the warres, to make preparation of luch as may better preserve mens

From whence the want of carriages did proceed, you may conjecture in that wee marched through a Country neither plentifull of fuch provisions, nor willing to part from any thing yes this I can affure you, that no man of worth was left either hurt or nicke in any place vopromitted for. And that the Generall commanded all the Mules and Affes, that were laden wire any bagpage to be vaburdened and taken to that yie : and the Earle of Effer and he for mony hired men gage to de about the said the Earle (whole true vertue and nobilitie, as it dothin all other his worthy his actions appeare, logidat very much in this) threw downe his owne fluffe, I meane apparell Acis. and necessiates which here had there from his owne carriages, and letzhem be left by the way to put burrand licke men your chem.

And the great complaint that these men make for want of victurils; may well proceed from their not knowing the wants of warre; for if to feed voon good Beeues, Muttons, and Goares, be to want , they have endured great francisie at Land , whereup to they never wanted two dayes , together wine to mixe which their water, nor bread to eat with them meat (in forme quantitie) ex-10 cept is were fuch as had vowedrather to there then to the out of their places for tood; of whom we have too many.

After tix dayer tayling from the Coaft of England, and the fifth after we had the wind good, be. Our men land ing the sweatieth of Aprill in the evening, we landed in a bay more the state English mile from the within a mile Groine, in our long Boats and Promaces without any impeachments from whence we prefectly of the G one marched toward the Towne, within one talke mile weowere encountred by the enemy, who being charged by ours, retired into their gates. For that might our Armietay in the Villages, Houses, and Mils next adjoyning, and very neere round about the Towne, into the which the G deon named S. John (which was the fecond of the last yeeres Flect against England) one Hulke, two smaller Ships, and two Gallies which were found in the Road, did beat vpon vs and vpon our 20 Companies as they palled too and tro that night and she next morning. General Norris having that morning before day viewed the Towne, found the fame defended on the Lind fide (for it franderh vpon the necks of antland) with a wall vpon adry Disch: whereupon hee refolued to try in two places what might be done against it by Escalade, and in the meane time adulied for the landing of some Artillerie to be upon the Ships and Gallies, that they might not annoy vs : which being buttin execution, woon she planting of the first Peece the Gallies abandoned the Road, and berooke them to Ferell, not farre from thence : and the Armada being beaten with the Artillery and Musketers that were placed upon the next shoare, left her playing upon vs. The reft of the day was frent in preparing the Companies and other promitions readie for the furprise of the bale Towne, which was effected in this fort.

There were appointed to bee landed 1200, men, under the conduct of Colorell Huntler, and Captaine Fewer the Vice-Admirall, on that fide nemetroning weby water in long Boates and Pinnaces, wherein worst placed many Perces of Artillery to beat upon the Towne in their spproach : at the corner of the wall, which defended the other water file, were appointed Captain Richard Wong field, Lieutenant Colonell to Generall Naris, and Captaine Sampfon, Lieutenant Colonell to Generall Drate, to enter at low water with fine hundred men it they found it piffable,but if not, to betake them to the Efeulede, for they had also Ladders with them fat the other corner of the wall, which towned to that fide that was attempted by water, were appointed Colonell Umpion, and Colonell Bret, with three bundred men to enter by Efcalade, All the Companies which should enter by Boat being imbarked before the low water, and having given the 40 alarme, Captaine Wingfield and Captaine Sampfon betooke them to the Efculade, for they had in commandement to chargeall at one initant. The Boats landed without any great diffidultie : vet had they some men hurt in landing. Colonell Bret, and Colonell Fington entred their quarter without encounter, not finding any defence made against them : for Captaine Hinder being one of them that entred by water, at his first entry, with some of his owne companie whom hee trufted well, betooke himfelie to that part of the wall, which hee cleered before that they offen red to enter, and fo fcoured the wall, till he came on the backe of them, who maintained the fight against Captaine Wingfield and Captaine Sampson; who were twice bearen from their Ladders, and found very good resistance, till the enemies perceiving ours entred in two places at their backes, were driven to abandon the fame. The reason why that place was longer defended then 50 the other, is (as Don Inan de Lune, who commanded the fame affirmeth.) that the enemie that day had refolued in counfell how to make their defences, if they were approached : and therein concluded, that, if wee attempted it by water, it was not able to bee held, and therefore upon the discovery of our Boates, they of the high Towne should make a fignall by fire from thence, that all the low Towne might make their recreat thither : but they (whether troubled with the fudden terror we brought vpon them, or forgetting their decree) omitted the file, which made them guard that place till we were entred on every tide.

Then the Towne being entred in three feuerall places with an huge cry, the Inhabitants betooke them to the high To a netwhich they might with leffe perill doe, for that ours being frangers there, knew not the way to cut them off. The rest that were not put to the sword in f. rie, fied to the Rocks in the liand, others hid themselves in Chambers and Sellers, which were every day found in great numbers.

Amongst those Don Inun de Luna, a man of very good commandement, having hidden himselfe in a houle, did the next morning yeeld himfelfe. There was also taken that night a Commissarie of victuals, called luan de Vera, who contested that there were in the Groine at our entrie fine hundred Soulders, being in feuen Companies, which returned very weake (as appeareth by the fmall numbers of them) from the journey of England. The rest falling into the hands of the common Soundiers, bad their throats cut, to the number of fine hundred as I conjecture, first and last after Intemporate wee had entred the Towne; and in the entry thereof there was found entrie Seller full of Wine. drinking cause whereon our men by inordinate drinking, both grew themselves for the present sensielse of the danger of the fhot of the Town, which hurs many of them being drunk, and tooke the first ground of their ficknesse; for of fuch was our first and chiefest mortalitie. There was also abundant store N wyovage to of Victualls, Salty and all kind of prouision for shipping and the warre : which was confessed be Escland inco. the faid Committary of Violualls taken there, to be the beginning of a Magasin of all softs of prothe faid Committary or Visitians season whereby you may consecture what the spoile thereof hath usifion for a new Voyage into England: whereby you may consecture what the spoile thereof hath advantaged vs, and prejudiced the King of Spaine.

The next morning about eight of the clocke the enemies abandoned their Ships, And having ouercharched the Astillery of the Gallion, left her on fire, which burnt in terrible fort two dates Gallion burne, together, the fire and ouercharging of the Peeces being fo great, as of fiftie that were in her, there were not about fixteene taken out whole; the rest with ouercharge of the powder being broken and molten with heat of the fire, were taken out in broken pieces into divers Ships. The fame day was the Cloifter of the South fide of the Towne entred by vs, which joyned verie neere to the wall of the Town, out of the chambers and other places whereof we beat into the fame with our Musketiers.

The next day in the afternoone there came downe fome two thousand man, gathered together out of the Countrey, even to the gates of the Towne, as resolutely (led by what spirit I know 20 not) as though they would have entred the fame : but at the first defence made by ours that had the guard there, wherein were flaineabout eighteene of theirs, they tooke them to their heeles in the tame diforder they made their approach, and with greater fpeed then ours were able to follow : notwithstanding wee followed after them more then a mile. The second day Colonell Huntler was fent into the Countrey with three or foure hundred men, who brought home very great flore of Kine and Sheepe for our reliefe.

The third day in the night, the Generall had in purpose to take a long Municion-house builded voon their wall, opening towardes vs, which would have given great advantage against them; but they knowing the commodity thereof for vs, burne it in the beginning of the eutning; which put him to a new councell : for he had likewife brought fome Artillery to that fide of the Town. Dangerous fire During this time there happened a very great fire in the lower end of the Towne : which, had it not bin by the care of the Generals heedily feene vnto and the fury thereof preuented by pulling downe many houses which were most in danger, as next vnto them, had burnt all the prouisions we found there, to our wonderfull hinderance.

The fourth day, were planted under the guard of the Cloisters two Demy-canons, and two Coluerings against the Towne, defended or gabbioned with a crosse wall, thorow which our battery lay; the first and second tire whereof shooke all the wall down, so as all the Ordnance lay open to the Enemy, by reason wherof some of the Canoniers were shot and some flaine. The Lieutenant also of the Ordnance, M. Spencer, was flame fait by Sir Edward Norris, Mafter thereof: 40 whose valour being accompanied with an honourable care of defending that trust committed vnto him, neuer left that place, till he receiued direction from the Generall his brother to cease the battery, which he presently did, leaving a guard upon the same for that day; and in the night following made to good defence for the place of the battery, as after there were very few or none annoyed therein. That day Captaine Goodwin had in commandement from the Generall, that when the affault should be given to the Towne, he should make a proffer of an Escalade on the other fide, where he held his guard : but he (mistaking the fignall that would have beene given) attempted the same long before the assault, and was shot in the mouth. The same day the Generalk having planted his Ordnance ready to batter, canted the Towne to be summoned; in which summons they of the Towne shot at our Drum : immediately after that there was one hanged over 50 the wall, and a parle defired; wherein they gaue vs to vinderstand, that the man hanged was hee that shot at the Drum before : wherein they all intreated to have faire wars, with promise of the ther prisoners, and somewhat of the rendring of the Towne, but not much, for they liftned not greatly thereunto.

Generall Norris having by his skilfull view of the Towne (which is almost all seated vpon 2 Rocke) found one place thereof mineable, did presently set workemen in hand withall; who after three daies labour (and the feuenth after we were entred the base Towne) had bedded their Powder, but indeed not farre enough into the wall. Against which time the breach made by the Canon being thought affaultable, and Companies appointed as well to enter the fame, as that which was expected should be blowne up by the Mine : namely, to that of the Canon, Captaine Richard Wingfield, and Captaine Philper, who led the Generalls Foot-company, with whom allo Captaine Torke went, whose principall commandement was over the Horse-men. And to that of the Mine, Captaine lobs Sampson, and Captaine Anthony Wingfield Lieutenant Colonell to the fame on their parts. The rest of the parle was spent in talking of Don Inan de Luna, and some o-

Matter of the Ordnance; with certaine selected out of divers Regiments. All these Companies being in Armes, and the affault intended to be given in all places at an inflant, fire was put to the traine of the Mine; by reason the Powder brake out backwardes in a place where the Caue was made too high there could be nothing done in either place for that day, During this time Captain Provisions Horder was tent with some chosen out of every Company into the Country for provisions, where breught in.

of he brought in good ftore, and returned without luffe. The next day Cap. Anthony Samplon was lent out with fome fine hundred to fetch in ponifiona for the Army, who was encountred by them of the Country, but he put them to flight, and returned with good fo ale. The same night the Miners were fet to worke againe, who by the second To day after had wrought very well into the foundation of the wall. Against which time the Companies aforefaid being in readineffe for both places (Generalt Drate on the other fide, with two or three hundred men in Pinnaces, making proffer to attempt a ftrong Fort voon an Iland before the Towne, where he left more then thirtiemen) fire was given to the teame of the Mine, which blew up halfo the Tower under which the Powder was planted. The affailants having in charge voon the efficiting of the Mine presently to give the affault, performed a accordingly; but too foone : for having entred the top of the breach the other halfe of the Tower, which with the first Towerfalle !! force of the Powder was onely shaken and made loose, sell woon our men twider which were buried about twentie or thirtie, then being under that part of the Tower. This fo amazed our men that flood in the breach, not knowing from whence that terror came, as they for looke their Com-30 manders, and lett them among the ruines of the Mire. The two E tignes of Generall Drake and Ca ptaine Anthony Worg field were for in the breach, but their colours were refeued : the Generails by Captaine Sampfons Lieurenant, and Captaine Wingfields by himfelfe. Amongst them that the wall tell voon, was Cap. Sydenbam pittifully loft; who having three or foure great flones voon his lower parts, was held to fait, as neither himfelfecould ftirre, nor any realonable company recouer him. Not withit anding the next day being found to be alive, there was ten or twelve loft in accempting to relieve him. The breach made by the Canon, was wonderfully well affaulted by them that had the charge thereof, who brought their men to the pull of the Pike at the top of this breach. And being readie to enter, the loole earth (which was indeede but the rubbilh of the worlde of the wall) with 36 the weight of them that were thereon flipped outwarder from under their feet. Whereby did app: are halfe the wall ymbatthred. For let no man thankpithat Culterin or Demy-canon can fallficiently batter a defentiblerambire : and of those Preces which we had the better of the Demy & canons at the fecond shot brake in her carriages , to me the battery was of seffe force, being but of

In our recreat (which was from both breaches thorow a narrow lane) were many of our men three Peeces hurt ; and Captaine Dolphin, who ferued very well that day, was hurt in the very breach. The failing of this attempt, in the opinion of all the beholders, and of fuch as were of the best judgement wis thefall of the Mine; which had doubtleffe facceeded, the rather, because the approch was vistooked for by the enemy in that place, and therefore not fo much defence made there as in the other, which made the Generall grow to a new resolution : for finding that two daies battery had fo little beaten their wall, and that he had no better preparation to batter withall : he knew its his experience, there was no good to be done that way; which I thinke he first put in proofe, to try if by that terror hee could get the upper Towne, having no other way to put it in hazzard fo speedily, and which in my conscience had obtained the Towne, had not the defendants bin in 25 great peril of their lives by the displeasure of their King in giving it vp, as by the Bullet or Sword in defending the same, For that day before the affault, in the view of our Armie, they burne's Cloifler within the Town, and many other houses adjoyning to the Castle to make it more desenfible: whereby it appeared how little opinion themselves had of holding it against vs , had not God

(who would not have ve fuddenly made proud) laied that misfortune voon ve. The next day the Generall hearing by a prifoner that was brought in, that the Conde de At-

50 drads had affembled an Armie of eight thousand at Puente de Burgos, fixe miles from thente in drads his Ars the way to Petance, which was but the beginning of an Armie ! in that there was a greater leavy mic. ready to come thither under the Conde de Altomira, either in purpole to relieue the Groine; or to encampe themselves neere the place of our embarking, there to hinder the lame; for to that purpole had the Marquelle of Siralba, written to them both the first night of our landing, as the Commiffary taken then conteffed, or at the leaft to ftop our further entrance into the Countrey, (for during this time, there were many incursions made of three or foure hundred at a time, who burnt, spoiled, and brought in victualls plentifully) the Generall, I say, hearing of this Armie, had in purpose the next day following to visite them, against whom hee carried but nine Regiments: inche Vantguard were the Regiment of Sir Roger Williams , Sir Edward Norrie, and Colonell Sadrey in the Battaile, that of the Generall of Colonell Lane, and Colonell Medierte and in the Rareward, Sir Henry Norris, Colonell Huntley, and Colonell Brets Regiments; lea-

Bing the other fine Regiments with Generall Drake, for the guard of the Clouter and Artif-

lery. About ren of the crocke the next day, being the fixe of May, halfe a mile from the Campe, wee discourring the enemy Sir Edward Norris, who commanded the Vantguard in chiefe, appointed his Lieutenant Colorieli Captaine Anthony Wingfield to command the thot of the fame, who divided them into three troupes; the one he appointed to Captain Meddleton to be conducted in away on the left hand : mother to Captain Erington to take the way on the right hand, and the bodie of them (which were Mulquetiers) Captamo Wing field tooke himfelfe, keeping the direct way of the march. But the way taken by Captaine Middleton met a little before with the way held by Captaine Wingfield, fo as he giving the first charge voon the enemy, was in the infant leconded by Captaine Wing field, who beat them from place to place (they having very good places of defence and croffe Waltes which they might have held long) till they betooke them to their Bridge, which is over a creeke comming out of the Sea, builded of Stone vpon Ar. ches. On the foot of the further fide whereof, lay the Car pe of the enemy very ftrongly entrenched, who with our hotbeaten to the further end of the Bridge, Sir Edward Norris marchine in the point of the Pikes, without flay palled to the Bridge, accompanied with Colonell Sidner, Captaine Hunder, Captaine Fulferd, and diners others, who found the way cleere over the lame, but through an incredible volley of thot; for that the thot of their Army flanked voon both files of the Bridge, the further end whereof was barricaded with Barrella: but they who should have guarded the same, feeing the proud approach wer made, fortooke the defence of the barricade. where Sir Edward entred, and charging the first defendant with his Pike, with very earnestnesse in overthrufting, fell, and was grieuoully hurt at the fword in the head , but was most honourably rescued by the Generall his brother, accompanied wirh Colonell Sadney, and some other 20 Gentlemen : Captaine Hinder also having his Caske thot off . has five wounds in the head and face at the fword : and Captaine Fulford was shot in the left arme at the same encounter : vet were they fo thorowly fesonded by the Generall, who, thruit himfelfe fo neere to give encouragement to the attempt (which was of wonderfull difficultie) as their braueft men that defended that place being ourrebrowne, their whole Army fell prefently into rout, of whomour men had the chafe three miles in foure fundry waies, which they betooke themfelues vnto. There was taken the Standard with the Kings Armes, and borne before the Generall. How many two thousand men (for of so many consisted our Vantamed) might kill so pursuit of foure fundry parties, fo many you may imagine fell before vs that day. And to make the number more great, our men having given over the execution, and returning to their flands a found many hidden in the 30 Vineyards and Hedges, which they dispatched. Also Colonell Mentore was feat with his Regiment three miles further to a Cloifter, which thee burnt and spoiled, wherein he found two hundred more, and put there to the fword. There were flaine in this fight on our fide onely Captain Cooper, and one private Souldier; Captaine Barton was also hurt vpon the Bridge in the eye. But had you seene the strong barricades they had made on either fide of the Bridge; and how strongly they lay encamped thereabouts, you would have thought it a rare refolution of ours to give lo braue a charge vpon an Armie fo strongly lodged. After the fury of the execution, the Generall fent the Yantguardone way, and the battell another, to burne and spoile; fo as you might have feene the Countrey more then three miles compalle on fire. There was found very good flore of Munition and victualis in the Campe, tome plate and sich apparell, which the betterfort left be- 40 hind, they were so hotly pursued. Our Sailers also landed in an Iland next adjoyning to our ships. where they burnt and spoiled all they found. Thus we returned to the Groine, bringing small com-

fore to the enemy within the fame, who that many times at vs as we marched out; but not once in our comming backe againe. The next day was fpent in shipping our Artillery landed for the battery, and of the rest taken at the Graine, which had it beene fuch as might have given ve any afforance of a better battery, or had there beene no other purpose of our journey but that, I thinke the Generall would have spent fome more time in the fiege of the place.

The two last nights, there were that vndertooke to fire the higher Towne in one place, where the hondes were builded upon the wall by the water fide; but they within suspecting as much, 50 made to good defence against vs, as they prevented the same. In our departure there was fire put into energe house of the low Towne, intomuch as I may fuftly fay, there was not one house left standing in the base Towne, or the Cloister.

The next day, being the eight of May, wee embarked our Armie without losse of a man, which (had wee no: beaten the enemie at Puente de Burgos) had beene impossible to have done.

After we had put from thence, we had the wind to contrarie, as we could not undernine daies recouer the Barlings ; in which passage on the thirteenth day the Earle of Effex, and with him M. Walter Doneraumhis brother (a Gentleman of wonderfull great hope) Sir Refer Williams Colonell Generall of the Footmen, Sir Philip Butler, who hath alwaies beene most inward with him, and Sir Edward Pingfield , came into the Fleet. The Earle put off in the fame wind from 60 Falmoush, that weeleft Plimouth in, where he lay, because he would avoid the importunitie of Mellengers that were daily fent for his returne, and some other causes more secret to himselfe, not knowing (as it feemed) what place the General's purpoted to land in, had bin as far as Casia in Andalazia, and lay vp and downe about the South Cape, where here tooke fome Ships laden with Corne, and brought them wato the Fleet. Also in his returne from thence to meet with our Fleet, he fell with the flands of Bayon; and on that fide of the River which Cannas standeth vp. on, he, with Sir Roger Williams, and those Gentlemen that were with him went on shoare, with fom: men out of the Ship he was in , whom the enemy that held guard voon that Coaft, would not abide, but fled vo into the Countrey.

The fixteenth day we landed at Peniche in Portugal, under the fhot of the Caftle, and about the They land at wafte in the water, more then a mile from the town, wherin many were in peril of drowning, by Perice. reason the wind was great, and the Sea went high, which ouerthrew one Boat, wherein fine and twentie of Captaine Dalphins men perished. The enemy being fine Companies of Spaniards, vnor der the commandement of Conde do Fuentes, fallied out of the town against vs, and in our landing made their approach close by the water fide. But the Earle of Effex, with Sir Roger Williams, and his brother, basing landed furncient number to make two troupes, left one to hold the way by the water fide, and led the other over the Sand-hills; which the enemy feeing, drew theirs likewife further into the Land; not, as we coniecured, to encounter vs, but indeed to make their speedie pallage away : not with franching they did it in fuch fort, as being charged by ours which were feat out by the Colonell generall under Captaine lack for, they flood the fame even to the puth of the Pike : in which charge and at the pifth, Captaine Robert Pier was flaine. The enemy being fled further then we had reason to follow them, all our Companies were drawne to the Town; which being vnfortified in any place, wee found undefended by any man against vs. And therefore the 20 Generall caused the Castle to bee summoned that night ; which being abandoned by him that commanded it, a Portugall named Antonio de Aurid, being post: fied thereof, defired but to be assured that Don Antonio was landed, whereupon he would deliver the fame ; which he honeftly performed. There was taken out of the Cattle some hundred Shot and Pikes, which Don Emanual Prinichetaken. furnished his Poringalle withall, and twentie Barrells of Powder : foas posteffing both the Town and the Caltle, we rested there one day; wherin some Friare and other poore men came vuto their new King, promiting in the name of their Countrey next adioyning, that within two dayes hee

Generals company of horfes were vnshipped, The Generalls there fully refolued, that the Armie should march ouer Land to Liben, vader They march 30 the conduct of Generall Norris ; and that Generall Drake should meet him in the River thereof towards Lines with the Fleet; that there hould bee one Company of Foot left in guard of the Caftle, and fix in the Ships : also that the licke and hurt should remaine there with provisions for their cures. In this march Captaine Criffe the Prouoit Marshall caused one who (contrary to the Proclamation published at our arruall in Persugal) had broken vp an house for pillage, to bee han- Good dice. ged, with the cause of his death woon his breath, in the place where the act was committed: which good example prouidently given in the beginning of our march, saufed the commandement to be more respectively regarded all the lourney after, by them whom feare of punishment doth only hold within compaffe. The Campe lodged that night at Loringe : the next day we had intelligence all the way, that the enemy had made head of Horse and Foot against vs at Tores Vedras. which wee thought they would have held : but comming thither the fecond day of our march, not two houres before our Vantgard came in, they left the Towne and Gaftle to the possession of

Don Antonio. There began the greatest want we had of victuals, especially of bread, you a commandement Want of bicept given from the Generall, that no man (hould spoile the Country, or take any thing from any Paring all : which was more respectively observed, then I thinke would have bin in our owne Countrey, among ft our owne friends and kindred but the Countrey (contrary to promife) wholly neg-Iced the prouition of victuals for vs, wherby we were driven for that time into a great fearlity. Which moved the Colonell Generall to call all the Colonells together, and with them to admite officme better course for our people : who thoughe it beft, frit to advertise the King what neces-30 ficie we were in, before we should of our selves alter the first institution of abstinence. The Colonell generall, having acquainted the Generall herewith , with his very good allowance thereof, went to the King ; who after some expostulations vied , tooke the more carefull erder for our men, and after that our Armie was more plentifully reliened.

The third day we lodged our Armie in three fundry Villages, the one Battalion lying in Exarama de los Canalleros, another in Exarama de Obifo, and the third in San Sibafian. Captain Tarke who commanded the Generalls Horse Company, in this march made triall of the valour of the Horsemen of the enemy; who by one of his Corporals charged with eight Horses thorow fortie of them, and himfelfe thorow more then two hundred, with fome fortie Horfes: who would abide him no longer then they could make way from him.

The next day we marched to Lores, and had divers Intelligences that the enemy would tarry vs there: for the Cardinall had made publike promife to them of Lithon, that he would fight with ws in that place, which he might have done advantageoutly ; for we had a Bridge to pulle ouer in the fame place : but before our comming he diffodged, notwithflanding it appeared vnto vathat her had in purpose to incompe there; for wee found the ground staked out where their trenches Xxxxxxx s should have bin made; and their Horsemen with some few Shot shewed themselves voon an Hill at our comming into that Village; whom Sir Henry Norris (whose Regiment had the point of the Vanteard) thought to draw voto fome fight, and therefore marched without found of Drum. and tomewhat faster then ordinary, thereby to get neere them before he were discovered for hee was shadowed from them by an Hill that was betweene him and them : but before he could draw his Companies any thing neere, they retired.

Generall Drates Regiment that night, for the commoditie of good lodging, drew themselves into a Village, more then one English mile from thence, and neere the enemy : who not daring to dor any thing against vs in foure dayes before, tooke that occasion, and in the next morning fell downe voon that Regiment, crying, Vina el Rey Don Antonio, which was a generall falutation to thorow all the Countrey as they came : whom our young Souldiers (though it were youn their guard, and before the watch were discharged) began to entertaine kindly, but having got within their guard, they fell to cut their throats : but the alarme being taken inwards, the Officers of the two next Companies, whose Captaines (Captain Sydnam and Captain Toung) were lately dead at the Grome, brought downe their Colours and Pikes voon them info resolute manner, as they prefently draue them to retire with loffe othey killed of ours at the first entrance fourteene, and The next day we lodged at Aluelana within three miles of Lisben, where many of our Souldi-

ers drinking in two places of standing waters by the way were poyloned, and thereon prefently dved. Some doe thinke it came rather by eating of Hony, which they found in the houses plentifully. But whether it were by Water or by Hony, the poore men were poifoned. That night the Earle of Effex Earle of Effex and Sir Roger Williams went out about eleven of the clocke with 1000, men to lie in ambuffade neere the Town, and having laied the fame very neere, fent some to give the alarme voto the enemy; which was well performed by them that had the charge thereof but the enemy refuled to like after them. to that the Earls returned as foone as it was light without doing any thing chough he had in purpole, and was ready to have given an honourable charge on them.

They come to

The act of May in the evening we came to the Suburbs of Lisbon : at the very entrance wherethe luburbs of of Sir Roger Williams calling Captaine Anthony Wing field with him, tooke thirtie Shot or thereabouts, and first icowred all the Streets till they came very neere the Towne; where they found none but old folkes and beggars, crying, Vine el Rey Don Antonio, and the houses shut up : for they 30 had carried much of their wealth into the Towne, and had fired fome houses by the waterfide, full of Corne and other econitions of victualis, leaft wer should be benefited thereby, but yet left behind them great riches in many houses. The foure Regiments that had the vantguard that day, which were Colonell Devereux, Six Edward Norris, Colonell Sidneys, and Generall Drakes (whom I name as they marched) the Colonell generall caused to hold guard in the neerest Streets of the Suburbs : the Battel and the Arrereward flood in Armes all the night in Field neere to Alcantara. Before morning Captaine Wingfield , by direction from the Colonell general! Sir Roger Williams, held guard with Sir Edward Norris his Regiment in three places very neere the Towne wall, and fo held the same till the other Regiments came in the morning. About midnight they within the Towns burnt all their houses that stood upon their wall either within or without least we possel- 40 fing them, might chereby greatly have annoyed the Towne.

Hou es burnt

The next morning Sir Roger Williams attempted (but not without perill) to take a Church called S. Antonio, which toyned to the wall of the Towne, and would have been a very euill neighbor to the Towne : but the enemy bassing more easie entry into it then wee, gained it before vs. The relt of that morning was (pent in quartering the Battell and Arrereward in the Suburbs called Bona Vista, and in placing Musquetiers in houses, to from their Shot vpon the wall, who from the same scowred the great Screets very dangerously. By this time our men being thorowly weary with our fixe dayes march, and the last nights

watch, were delirous of rest; whereof the enemy being aduertifed, about one or two of the clocke

fallied out of the Town, and made their approach in three feuerall Streets vpon vs, but chiefly in 50 Colonell Brets quarter : who (as most of the Armie was) being at reft, with as much speed as he could, drew his men into Armes, and made head against them to thorowly, as himfelfe was flain in the place, Captaine Carfes thor thorow the thigh, of which hurt hee died within foure dayes after, Captaine Care flaine prefently, and Captaine Cane hurt (but not mortally) who were all of his Regiment. This relifance made as well here, as in other quarters where Colonell Lane and Colonell Medkerk commanded, put them to a sudden foule retreat ; infomuch, as the Earle of Effex had the chale of them enen to the gates of the high Town, wherin they left behind them many of their best Commanders ; their troupe of Horsemen also came out, but being charged by Captain Torke, withdrew themselves againe. Many of them also left the streets, and betooke them to houses which they found open : for the Sergeant Maior Captain Wilfon flew in one house with 60 his owne hands three or foure, and caufed them that were with him to kill many others. loffe I can affure you did triple ours, as well in qualitie as in quantitie. During our march to this place, Generall Drake with the whole Fleet was come into Cafeais,

Name, fled with their baggage into the Mountaines, and left the Towne for any man that would notifie it, till Generall Drake lent unto them by a Portngall Pilot which he had on boord, to of- ken fer them all peaceable kindnesse, so farre forth as they would accept of their King, and minister necessaries to the Armie he had brought; which offer they joyfully imbraced, and presently sent two chiefe men of their Town, to figuifie their loyaltie to Don Antonio, & their boneft affections to our people. Whereupon the Generall landed his Companies not farre from the Cloifter called San Domingo, but not without perill of the shot of the Castle, which being guarded with fixtie fine Spannards, held flill against him. As our Fleet were catting anker when they came first into that Road, there was a small ship of Brafil that came from thence, which bare with them, and feemed by firiking her failes, as though the would also have ancred : but taking her fittest occasion hossed againe, and would have passed vp the River, but the Generall presently discerning her purpose, sent out a Pinnace or two after her, which forced her in such fort, as she ran her felte what whe Rocka fall the men escaped out of her, and the lading (being many chees of Sugar) was made nothing worth, by the Salt water. In his going thither alfo, he tooke Ships of the Port of Portagell, which were lent from thence, with Ships taken. fifteene other from Pedro Vermendes Xantes Sergeant Major of the fame place, laden with men and victualls to Lisbon : the rest that escaped put inso detand. The next day it pleafed Generall Nerres to call all the Colonels meether, and to admise with them, whether it were more expedient to carry there to attend the forces of the Portugall Horse

20 and Foot, whereof the King had made promise, and to march tome concenient number to Cafeass to fetch our Artillery and Munition which was all at our thips laving that which for the necessisty of the service was brought along with vs.whereunto, some carried away with the vaine hope of Don Antonio, that the most part of the Town stood folivs, held it best to make our abode tiere; Consultation and to fend fome three thousand of our Artillery : promising to themselves, that the Enemy being well beaten the day before, would make no more fallies : fome others (whose unbeliefe was very strong of any hope from the Portugal) perswaded rather to march wholly away, then to be any longer carried away with the opinion of things, whereof there was so little appearance. The Generall, not willing to leave any occasion of blot to be laid vpon him for his speedie going from thence, nor to lose any more time by attending the hope of Dos Antonio; told them, that though 30 the expedition of Paraged were not the onely purpole of their iburney, but an aductive there in (which if the duced proleproudly might make them subjectedly sick, and wonderful honourble) and that they had done to much alreade in triall thereof; as what end focuer happened could nothing impaire their credits : yet in regard of the Kings last promise, that hee should have that night three thousand armed men of his owne Country, he would not for that night dislodge. The King of Portugall (whether carried away with imagination, by the advertisements he receiued from the Portugalls, or willing by any promise to being such an Armie into his Countrey, there would be a revolt of his Subjects. After two nights staying at Lisbon , the King , as you have heard promised a supply of three 40 thousand Foot, and some Horse; but all his appointments being expired, even to the last of a night, all his Horse could not make a Cornet of fortie, nor his Foot furnish two Enfignes fully, although promises they carried three or four colours : and these were altogether such as thought to inrich themfelues by the ruine of their neighbours : for they committed more diforders in every place where we came by spoile, then any of our owne.

thereby to put his fortune once more in triall) assured the Generall, that voon his first landing

The Generall, as you fee, having done more then before his comming out of England was required by the King, and given credite to his many promifes, even to the breach of the lait, he defifted not to perswade him to stay yet nine daies longer: in which time hee might have engaged himselfe further, then with any honor he could come out off againe, by attempting a Town tortified, wherein were more men armed against vs, then we had to oppugne them withall, our Artil-50 lery and Municion being fitteene miles from vs., and our men then declining; for there was the first show of any great ficknesse amongst them. Whereby it seemeth, that either his Prelacie did much abuse him in perswading him to hopes, whereof after two or three daies hee law no semblance : or heelike ailly louer, who promifeth himselfe fauour by importuning a coy mistreste, thought by our long being before his Towne, that in the end taking pittie on him they would ket him in. What end the Friers had by following him with fuch deuotion I know not, but fire I am, the Lattie did respite their homage till they might see which way the victorie might sway; fearing to shew themselves apparantly vnto him, least the Spaniard should after our departure (if we preualed not) call them to account : yet fent they underhand messages to him of obedience, thereby to faue their owne, if he became King; but indeed very well contented to fee the Spania 60 ards and vs crie by blowes who should carry away the Crowne. For they be of so base a mould, as they can very well fubicet themselves to any gouernment, where they may interest from blowes, and have libertie to become rich, being loth to indure hazzard either of life or goods. For durft they have put on any minds thorowly to recolt, they had three wonderfull great occasions offered them during our being there, &c.

. The next morning, feeing no performance of promife kept, the Generall gaue order for our they make a marching away shimfelfe, the Earle of Effex, and Sir Roger Williams remaining with the stand that was made in the high street, till the whole Armie was drawne into the Field, and so marched out of the Fourier, appointing Captaine Richard Wing field, and Captaine Anthony Winfield in the Arrereward of them with the thot; thinking that the enemy (as it was most likely) would have ished out woon our rising; but they were otherwise aduled. When we were come into the Field, energe Battalion tell into that order which by course appertained vinto them, and so marched that night vinto Cascais. Had wee marched thorow his Country as enemies, our Souldiers had beene well supplied in all their wanes : but had wee made enemies of the Suburbs of Luben. wee had beene the richest Armie that ever went our of England : for besides the particular to wealth of every house, there were many Ware-houses by the water fide full of all forts of rich in our march that day the Gallies which had some what, but not much annoyed vs at Lishon. (for that our way lay along the River) strended ve till we were past S. I what, bestowing many fhor amongst vs, but did no harme as ally faving that they ftrooke off a Gentlemans leg, and killed the Sergeant Majors Moule visiter him. The Hortementalio followed vs afarre off, and out off as many ficke men as were not able to hold in march, nor we had carriage for. After we had beene two daies at Cofcais, wee had intelligenceby a Friar, that the enemy was marchine frongly towards us; and then came as farre as S. Inlian : which newes was lowelcome to the Farle of Effex and the Generalie; so they offered every one of them to gue the Mellenger 20 an hundred Crownes if the ground titem in the place ; for the Generall defiring mothing more then to fight with themma field roome; difpatched that night a Messenger with a Trumpet, by Englife to dight whom the writ a Cartell to the Generall of their Armie, wherein he gaue them the lie, in that it was buthamiteported that week diflodged from Lishon in diforder and feare of them (which indeed mai most falle) for that it was fine if the clocke in the morning before wee fell into Armes, and then went in slich fore, as they had no courage to follow out voon vs. Also he challenged him chereinuse meet him the next morning with his whole Armie, if hee durit attend his comming, and there corry out the infineffe of their quarrell by bartell; by whom also the Earle of Ellex (who preferring the hanounof the taute, which was his Countries, before his owne fafetie) fent a particular Carrell, offering himfelfo against any of theire, if they had any of his qualitie; or if they 30 would libradmit of that; fixydight, orten or as many as they would appoint, should meet so mamy of theirs in the head of our batted toits is their fortunes with them; and that they should have

The Generaliaccordingly made all his Armie readie; by three of the clocke in the morning and marched even to the place where they had encamped, but they were diflodged in the night in great dilorder, being taken with a fudden feare that we had been come your them as the Generall was the next day certainely informed a foas the Trumpet followed them to Liston , but could not get other answere to either of his Letters, but threatning to bee hanged; for daring to being fuch a mellage. Howbeit the General had caused to be written woon the backfide of their Paspose, that if they did offer any violence voto the Messengers, he would hand the best prifoners 40 he had of clinis surhidifmade them to add to better of the matter, and to returne them home; but without answered a contract

Afterein Armie came to Calcair, and the Calife funntioned, the Callelian thereof granted, that vpon five or fix that of the Canon he would deliver the fame, but not without fig he thereof. The General chinking that his diffreste within had been such for want of men or victuals, as he could not hold it many dayer , because hee faw it otherwise defenfible enough , determined rather to make him weeld to that necessitie, then to bring the Canon, and therefore onely set a guard upon the lare, leaft any supply of those things which hee wanted should bee brought voto them. But hee fell standing vponthele conditions, the Generallabout two dayes before hee determined to goe to Sea; brought three or foure Peeces of battery against ie t voon the frist tire whereof he fur- 50 rendered, and compounded to goe away, with his bageage and Armes thee had one Canon, two Culturings; one Batiliske, and three or four other Field Peeces, threefcore and five Sculdiers, very good forc of Municion ; and victualisenough in the Caffle; infomuch as hee might have held the fame longer then the Generall had in purpose to trevy there. One company of Footmen was put into the goard thereof, till the Artillery was taken out, and our Armie imbarked; which without having that fort, we could not without great perill have done. When we were readie to les faite (one halfe of the Fort being by order from the Generall blowne vp by mine) the company was drawne away.

During the time we lay in the Road, our Fleet began the fecond of June, and fo continued fix dayes after to fetch in fome Hulks to the number of threefcore, of Danis, Stein, Roflock, Luvech 60 and Hamburgh, laden with Spanish goods, and as it feethed for the Kings provision, and going to Libes : their principall lading was Corne, Matts, Cables, Copper, and Waxe : among t which were some of great burthen wonderfull well builded for failing, which had no great lading in them, and therefore it was thought they were brought for the Kings promision, to reinforce his decaied Name: whereof there was the greater likelihood, in that the owner of the greatest of them which carried two milnes, was knowne to be very inward with the Cardinall, who rather Cardinall d'then he would be taken with his ships, committed himselfe vnto his small Boate, wherein he ber after marrecoured Saint Sebastians: into the which our men, that before were in flicaboates, were ried to the Inrecovered Saint Sebaftiant: into the which our men, that before were in included, the But fanta and Rushipped, and the Flie-boates fent home with an offer of Corne, to the value of their hire. But fer of the Susthe winde being good for them for Rochel, they chose rather to loose their Corne then the winde, n' B Portot the and fo departed. The General alfo fent his Horfes with them, and from thence shipped them Low Countries. into England.

The third of June, Colonell Deuereux, and Colonell Sidney, being both very ficke, departed for To England, who in the wholesourney had fliewed themselves very forward to all feruices, and in their departure very vinwilling to leaue vs: that day we embarked all our Army, but lay in the road vatill the eight thereof. The fixt day, the Earle of Effex, vpon receit of Letters from her Maiefly, by them that brought in the victuals, prefently departed towards England, with whom Sir Roger Williams was very defirous to goe, but found the Generals very viwilling he should do fo, in that he bare the next place vnto them, and if they should militarry, was to command the Army. And the fame day there came vnto vstwo imall Barkes, that brought tidings of some other thips come out of England with victuals, which were passed vowards to the Cape : for meeting with whom, the second day after we fet faile for that place, in purpose after our meeting with them to goe with the Iles of Azorei, the fecond day, which was the ninth, we met with them comming backe agains towards vs. whose provision little answered our expectation. Notwithstanding we resolved to continue our courie for the Ilands.

About this time waithe Marchant Royall, with three or foure other thips, fent to Pemche, to fetch away the commanios that vecrelete there; but Captain Barton having received Letters from the Generala that were forit overland, was departed before, not being able by reason of the enemies speedy marching thicker, either so being a way the artillery, or all his men, according to the direction chafe letters gauthum; for he was no fooner gone, then the themy possessed the Towne and Caftle, and shocat our thips as they came into the road.

At this gine allo was the Ambiffador from the Emperor of Marger enled Reys Hames Ben- Marger Free 36 cafamp, reture, cd, and with him M. Ciprian a Gentleman of good place and defert, who fent from balladour.

There were also two Hulkes stragted far from the frength of che other think, which were fo calmed, as neither they could get to vs. nor we to them, though all the great thips towed with their Bouts to have relieved them, but could not be recourred; in one of which was Captaine Minfham with his company, who fought with them to the laft, yea after his flup was on fire, which whither it was fired by himselfe or by them we could noe well diferre, but might eafily judge by his tong and good fight, that the enemy could not but fulfain much loffer who letting also voon one other Hulke wherein was but a Lieutenant, and he very ficke, wereby the valour of the Lieutenant put off, although they had first beaten her with their artillery, and attempted to boord her. And feeing also one other Hulke a league off, a Sterne of vs, they made towards her : but finding that the made ready to fight with them; they durit not further attempt her: whereby it feemed, their loffe being great in the other fights, they were loath to proceede any further.

From Mar day mill the nineteenth of lune, our direction from the Generall was, that if the winde were Northerly, we should plie for the Azores; but if Southerly, for the Hes of Bayon. We lay with contrary windes about that place and the Rocke, till the Southerly winde prevai- Espon. ling catried vs to Bajon: among whom was Sir Henry Norris in the Ayde; who had a purpole (if the Admirals had not come in) with fome 500, men out of them all to have landed, and attempted the taking of Vige. The rest of the fleet held with generall Drake, who though he were two dayes before put vpon those llands, cast off sgaine to Sea for the Azores: but remembring how vaprouided he was for that journey, and feeing that he had loft company of his great ships, so returned for Bayon, and came in there that night in the cuening, where hee paffed up the River more then a mile about Vigo.

The next morning wee landed as many as were able to fight, which were not in the whole about two thousand men (for in the seuenteene dayes we continued on boord wee had caft

On the other fide the Towne entreu Generall Drake with Captaine Richard Wingfield, whose approach on that side (I thinke) made them leave the places they had so artificially made for defence: there were also certains thins fent with the Vice-admirall to lye close before the Towne, to beate upon the farne with

In the afternoone were fent three hundred under the conduct of Captaine Petuin and Captain 10 Henry Poure, to burne another Village betwixe that and Bayon, called Borfis, and as much of the Countrie as the day would give them leave to doe; which was a very pleafant rich Valley: but they burne it all, houses and corne, as did others on the other fide of the Town, both that and the next day, fo as the Countrey was spoiled seuen or eight miles in length. There was found greet flore of Wine in the Town, but not any thing elfe : for the other dates warning of the thins that came first in gaue them a respit to carry all away.

The next morning by breake of the day the Colonell generall (who in the absence of the Generals that were on boord their ships, commanded that night on shoare) caused all our Companies to be drawne out of the Towne, and fent in two troupes to put fire in every house of the fame: which done, we imbarked againe. This day there were certaine Mariners which 20 (without any direction) put themselves on thoure, on the contrary fide of the River from vs

The fame day the Generals feeing what weake estate our Army was drawne into by ficknes. determined to man and victuall twenty of the best ships for the Hands of Azeres, with General Drate, to fee if he could meete with the Indian Fleet, and Generall North to returne home with the rest : And for the shitting of men and victuals accordingly, purposes the next morning to fall downe to the Hands of Bayon againe, and to remaine there that day. But Generall Drake, according to their appointment, being under faile neuer strooke at the llands, but out straight to Sea : whom all the Fleet tollowed fauing three and thirty, which being in the Riper further then he, and at the entrance of the fame, finding the winde and tide too hard against them, were inforced to cast ancre there for that night; among st whom, by good fortune, was the Forefight, and inher Sir Edward Norris. And the night following, Generall Norris being driven from the rest of the Fleet by a great florme (for all that day was the greatest florme we had all the time we were out) came againe into the Hands, but not without great perill, he being forced to turft to a Spanish Fisher-mail (who was taken two dayes before at Sea) to bring him in.

The next morning he called a counfell of as many as he found there, bolding the purpose hee had concluded with Sit Francis Drake the day before, and directed all their courtes for England. tarrying there all that day to water and helpe such with victuall, as were left in wonderfull die fireffe by having the victuals that came last, carried away the day before to Sea.

The next day he fet taile, and he tonth day after, which was the fecond of July came into 40 Plimmouth, where he found Sir Francis Drake and all the Queenes ships, with many of the others but not all: for the Fleete was dispersed into other harbours, some led by a deire of returning from whence they came, and fome being possessed of the hulkes, fought other Ports from their Generals eye, where they might make their private commoditie of them, as they have done to their great advantage: Pretently upon their arrivall there, the Generals diffolued all thearmiefaums eight companies which are yet held together, giung euery Souldier fine fhillings in money, and the armes he bare to make money of, which was more then could by any meanes be due vnto them : for they were not in feruice three moneths, in which time they had their victuals, which no man will value at leffe then halfe their pay, for such is the allowance in her Maiesties ships to her Mariners, so as there remained but ten shillings a moneth to be paid, for which there was not any private man but had apparell and furniture to his owne vie, to as every common Souldier discharged, received more in money, victuals, apparell, and furniture, then his pay did amount voto.

Thus then, all things being in a very good order and well appointed, the most holy name of our Omnipotent God being most religiously and deuoutly called vpon', and his blessed and Go cred Communion being divers times most reverently and publikely celebrated : being furnished with one hundred and fiftie good faile of thips, or thereabout : In the name of the most high and euerliuing God; the first day of Iune they embarked themselues, weighed Ancre, and hoysed yo faile, and put to Sea onward their journey from the Sownds of Plymmont, to flew her Maiethe streligious intendments in this exploit. I have thought good to adde here a Prayer made by her felte (as was reported) and vied, as it was fitted, for that deligne.

The ninth of the same moneth comming something neete to the North Cape, in a manner in the same altitude, or not much differing, which was about 43. degrees, and something more, yet bearing fo. as it was impossible to be descried from the land. There it pleased the Lords to call a fele& Councell, which was alwaies done by hanging out of a Flagge of the Armes of England, and shooting off a great warning peece. Of this select or privile Counsell, were no moe then thefe: The two Lords Generall, the Lord Thomas Howard, the Lord Warden Six Walter Raleigh. the Lord Marshall Sir Francis Pere, Sir George Cary Master of the Ordnance. Sir Coniers Clifford. and Sir Anthony Albley, Clarke of the faid Counfell. And when it pleafed the Lords Generall to call a common Counfell (as oftentimes they did vpon weighty matters best knowne to their honours) then they would cause another kinde of Flag to be hanged out, which was the red Crosse of S. George, and was very easie to be discerned from the other that appertained onely to the felect Counfell, and to often as this Flag of S. George was hanged out, then came all the Mafters and Captaines of all the thips, whose opinions were to be demanded, in such matters as apperexined voto the faid felca Counfell : It was prefently concluded that our course in failing should forthwith be altered, and that we should beare more into the West, for some purposesto them

At that initiant many Letters of inftructions were addressed and fent to every particular Mafter and Captaine of the Ships : What the contents of thole Letters of instructions were, it was not as yet knowne vito any, neither was it held meete to be enquired or knowne of any of vs. But vader the titles and superscriptions of euery mans particuler Letter these words were en- 40 dorfed. Open not these Letters on paine of your lines, valeffe wee chance to be scattered by tempest, and in that case open them, and execute the contents thereof : but if by mishap you fall into your enemies hand, then in any case cast them into the Sea, sealed as they are. It should feeme that these Letters did contains in them the principall place and meaning of this entended action, which was hitherto by their deepe forelights kept io lecret, as no man to my knowledge ei her did or could fo much as suspect it, more then themselves, who had the onely mamaging thereof.

All this while, our fhips, God be thanked, kept in a most excellent good order, being denided into five fquadrons : that is to fay, The Earle of Effer, the Lord Admirall, the Lord Thomas Howard, the Lord Warden Sir Walter Raleigh, and the Admirall of the Hollanders. All which 10 iquadrons, albeit they did euery day separate themselves of purpose, by the distance of certains ltagues, as well to looke out for fuch thips as were happily vader faile, as also for the better procuring of Sea-roome : yet alwayes commonly either that day, or the next day, toward evening, they came all together, with friendly falutations and gratulations one to another; which they tearme by the name of Hayling; a ceremonie done folemnly, and in very good order, with found of Trumpets and notic of cheerefull voyces: and in fuch fort performed as was no small encouragement one to the other, befide a true report of all fuch accidents as had happened in their fquadrons.

Hitherto, as I faid, our journey was most prosperous, and all our thins in very good plight, more then that the Afary Rofe, by some mischance, either sprang or spent her forevard, and two dayes 63 after Sir Robert Croffe had in a manner the like milchance.

Now being thus betweene the North Cape, and Cape S. Fincent, and yet keeping such a course Flemming take a loofe, that by no meanes, those from the shoare might be able to descrie vs : The tench of lone, and dismitted, a French Barke, and a Flemming comming from the coast of Barbaris were brought in by some of our company; but they were both of them very honogably and well yied by the Lords Generall, and to atter a few dayes tarrying, were peaceably fent away, after that they had conferred with them about facis matters, as was thought good in their honorable wifedomes. The twelfth of the Hambareers fame moneth, Sir Richard L. mifon Knight, affilted with Sir Christopher Blunt, fought with three taken. Hamburgers, and in that fight flew two of them, and hurt eleven, and in the end brought them all three in. The next day after, Sir Richard Weston meeting with a Flemming, who refused to vaile his foretop, with the like good courage and resolution, attempted to bring him in. The fight continued very hot betweenerthem, for a good space : in the end, the Swan, wherein the faid Sir Richard to was, had her forebeake altrooken off : and having spent before in fight the one side of her tire of Ordnance, while the prepared to cast about, and to bestow on him the other side, in the meane time the Elemening taking his opportunitie, did get almost halfe a league from him: and so for that time made his escape. And yet the next day after, the faid Fleuming being in a manner got to the very mouth of the River up to Lisbons, was taken and brought in by Maiter Dorrell, being Captaine of the lobn and Prairie of London.

The 13. 14. and 15. dayes, cortaine little stragling Carauels were taken by certaine of the Fleete; and in one of them ayong beggerly Fryer vetesly valearned, with a great packet of Let- Leiters taken

The 38.day early in the morning we tooke an Irishman, and he came directly from Cadiz, ha- 1. issue an inch 10 uing beene there but the day before at twelue of the clocke at high noone. This man being exalligence, mined, told truely that there was now great flore of thipping at Cade, and with them eight teene or nineteene Galhes in a readinelle, and that among those thiss there were ditiers of the Kings beit: and namely, that the Philip of Spaintwas amongst them, but what their intent was, her could not tell. This man was commanded also to give his attendance. The 20. of lune, being Sunday; were came before Cadi z, very early in the morning, and in all this time as yet, the whole Nauic had not loft either by fickness or by any other manner of water fix men to my knowledge.

Thus then I fay, being all ingood plight and fivong the so. of fune we came to Cadez, and there cade. very early in the morning preferred our refues before the Towner, riding about a league or fome- Some which go thing lefte, from it. The Soa at that inthant were margellous high, and the winde was exceeding proteff marlarge. No withflanding; a Countell being called, our Lords Generall forthwith attempted with tiall anywhole all expedition to land forms certains Companies of their men at the West fide of the Tourie, by landing in first au experience de la company de certaine long meath, give non authorized they chanced to finke one of their Barges, with fone foure the weather page it and in the attempting thereof, they chanced to finke one of their Barges, with fone foure the weather fore good fouldiers well appointed in her, and yet by good hap and great care, the men were all ferued bur the faued excepting night. And therefore they were confirmed to put off their landing till another ferupter unmore concenient time.

That morning very timely, there lighted a very faire Done vpon the maine yard of the Lord a million of Admirals flip, and there she far very quietly for the space of three or foure houres. And as at our wealth. go very first comming to Cades this chanced, in Idewite on the very list day of our departing from Doues lighting the faid Towne, another Doue prefented her felfe in the felfe fame order into the same ship, and prefently grew wonderfull tame and familiar to vs all, and did fo still keepe vs company, even till our arrivall here in England. We no fooner prefented our felues, but prefently a goodly fort of tall Spanish Ships came out of the mouth of the Bay of Cadie, the Gallies accompanying them in such good or keryand to placed as all of them might well succour each other, and therewithall kept themselves very close to their Fowne, the Cattle, and the Forts, for their better guard and defence, abiding there ftill, and expecting our further determination. All that day passed, being very rough and boisterous, and liethe or nothing could be done, more then that about the eneming there passed fome friendly and to de falurations fenc one from the other in warlike manner, by discharging centhine greate miles ouer or there abouts, yet be there many rockes, shelues, fands, and shallowes in it. fo there the very channell and place for lea roome, is not about two or three miles, yea, and in tome places not lo much, for the thips of any great burthen to make way in, but that they must either be let on g ound, or elfe conftrained to run foule one on another. All this norwithflanding, with great and intincible courage, the Lords generall prefently fer vpon them, and forting out fome fuch convenient ships, as to their honorable wisedomes seemed fictest for that times service, they were driuen to take some other course then before had beene by them entended. Wherefore ypon a grave confultation had by a felect counfell, they concluded that the Vice-admirall, the Lord Thomas Howard, in the Non Pareille for that time, and the Reare Admirall Sir Walter Release in the Warfpicht, aflociated with Sir Francis Vere the Lord Marshall in the Rainbox, Sir George Can In ry Mafter of the Ordnance, in the Mary Rose, Sir Robert Southwell in the Lyon; having with them fome of the Ships of London, and some of the Dutch squadron of reasonable burthen should lead the dance, and give the oniet, and that the two most noble Lords generall with some others of their companies, should in their convenient time and order, second the maine battelli. The fishe being begun and growne very hot, the Lord generall the Earle of Effex, being on Port Saint Man er fide, voon a fudden and volooked for of others, thrust himfelfe among the formost into the maine battell. The other most honorable Lord generall vnderstanding the most noble Eirle to be in fight among them, and perceiving by the Mafter of his thip, the A keroyall, that for lacke of water, it was not possible, that he might put any neerer, without further delay, called presently for his Pinnace, and in the same Pinnace put himselfe, and his honorable son Lord William How- 20 and about the Honor de la mer, & there remained in the fight till the battell was ended. The fight was very teirible on all fines, and to continued doubtfull cill about one or two of the clocke in the afternoone : about which time the Philip, whom in very truth, they had all most fancie voto bee gan to yeelde and give over, her men that remained alive flufting for themfelues as they were able, and fwimming and running alhoure with all the hafte that they could possibly, and therewithall, at the very fame inftant themselves fired their ship, and so left her, and prefently thereupon a great Argofic, with another mighty great ship, fired themselves in the like manner, Im-mediatly hereupon, the refidue of the ships ran themselves on ground as far from vs as they could, thereby purchased their owne latetic, or rather breathing spice for the time. Of them all, two faire ships onely were boonled and taken by our men with most part of their furniture in them, 20 Two Apofiles the one called S. Maibew, a fhip by estimation of some twelve hundred tun, and the other S. Anforcedtopreach drewbeing a thip of not much leffer burthers, The Gallies, feeing this fodgine great victorious on nerthrow made all the halfe they could soward the Bridge called Puente de Suace, and there throwded themselves in such fort as our ships could not by any meanes possible come night them The Spanish thips in all were fifty nine, and as I faid, all tall thips, and very richly furnished and well appointed, whereof tome of them were bound for the Indies, and other traighted and furnished for Lisbon, as themselves affirme : and had we not come that very time that we did. wee had certainly mist of them all.

For albeit the very Bay it felte is very large and exceeding belorifull, to that from Cade to Port S. May, is some fix of lonen English

Of what great wealth and riches thefeships were, that I leave to other mens judgement and an report, but fure I am, that themselves offered two millions and a halfe of ducats for the redemption of the goods and riches that were in them : which offer of theirs, albeit it was accepted of the Lords generall, and should have beene received, yet we were defeated of it, as hereafter shall be more at large declared.

In all this cruell terrible fight, there were not either flaine or hurt by any manner of meanes many about the number of 100.0f our men; not with standing divers of our ships were many times shot thorow and thorow; yea and some of them no lesse then two and twenty times as I was enformed by credible report of the Captaines and Masters themselves. I know not of any other hurt done . faving onely that Sir Robert Southwell, who alwayes thewed himfelfe a most valiant rejobite knight in all this action, making a little too much hafte with his Pinnace to board 50 the Philip, had there his faid Pinnace burnt with the Philip at the same instant, and yet by good care and diligence his men were faued. One other mischance happed thus : One of the Flemming Flie-boats, who had in all the conflict before, carried her felfe very well and valiantly, about ten of the clocke while the fight continued tharpest, chanced by great negligence and misfortune, to be fired and blown up by his owne powder, who could not have any fewer in him, then one hundred fighting men by all impposall, and so in the very twinkling of an eye, both thip and men were all catt aways excepting tenen or eight, which by very good fortune, and great care and diligence of forme of the other throstwere faued.

Immediately upon this notable victory, without any further flay in all the world, the Lord generall the Earle of Effer put to shore, & landed about 3000 shot and pikemen of the which number the one halfe was presently dispatched to the bridge Puente de Suage, under the conduct of Sir Christopher Blum, Sir Coniers Clifford, and Sir Thomas Gerard: with the other halfe, being 2bout fitteene hundred, the most noble Earle of Effex himselfe, being accompanied with divers or ther honorable Lords, namely the Earle of Suffer, the Lord Harbert, the Lord Bark, Come Lodenick of Nassaw, the Lord Marshall Sir Francis Vere, with all expedition possible marched on foote toward the towne of Cadiz, which was about three English miles march. That time of the day was very hot and faint, and the way was all of dry deepe fliding fand in a manner, and befide that. Bad way, very vieuen, and by that meanes fo tirelome and painfull as might be. The enemie having reafonable companie both of horie and footemen, stood in a readingle fome good distance without the towne to welcome vs, and to encounter the Lord Generall. But the most famous Earle with his valiant Troopes, rather running indeede in good order, then marching, haftened on them with fuch vofpeakeable courage and celeritie, as within one houres space and leffe, the horsemen were all discomfited and put to flight, their leader being itrooken downe as the very first encounter; to whereat the footemen being wonderfully difmajed and aftonished at the vnexpected manner of the Englishmens kinde of such fierce and resolute fight, retyred themselves with all the speede possible that they could to recouer themselves into the Towne againe. Which being done by them, with farre (wifter legges then manly courage, our men were enforced to scale the wals: which thing in very deede, although it was not without great danger and difficultie to be performed : vet luch was the inuincible resolution, and the wonderfull dexteritie of the English, that in one halfe houre or thereabout, the enemy was repulfed, and the towne wall possessed, by the no- The Enelish

The Town wals being then poffessed, and the English Ensigne being there displaied vpon them, to with all speede possible they proceeded on to march through the Towne, making still their way with (word and that to well as they could, being full fought withall at everie turne. The noble Earle was feconded by the noble Lord Admirall in person, who was accompanied with the noble Lord Thomas Howard, the most worthy Gentleman his Sonne (after Lord Howard) Sir Robert Southwell. Sir Richard Lenifon, and with divers other Gentlemen, his Lordships followers of good account: his Colours being advanced by that valiant refolute Gentleman, Sir Edward Hobby Knight. And thus he like wife marching with all possible speede on foote, notwithstanding his * I have big L. many yeeres *, the intolerable heate for the time, and the ouertring tedious deepe fands, with told by some of other many impediments: Yet in good time, joyned himielfe with the Earle and his companies, and gave them the ftrongest, and best assistance that he could.

Thus then the two Lords Generall with their companies being joined together, and proceeding fo farre as the market place, there they were horly encountered, where and at what time, that worthy famous Knight Sir lobn Winkfield, being fore wounded before on the thigh, at the he was 68, years very entring of the Towne, and yet for all that no white respecting himselfe, being carried away old, or between with the care he had to encourage and direct his Company, was with the shot of a Musket in the that and 70. head most vafortunately slaine.

And thus before eight of the clocke that night were thefe two most noble Lords General, Ma. 1624. crowned fters of the market place, the forts, and the whole Towne and all, onely the Castle as yet holding with filter out and from time to time as they could, stil annoying them with feuen battering peeces. By this dentaies of time night began to grow on, and a kinde of peace or intermission was obtained by them of the Ca- glorious a de-40 file : to whom the Lords Generall had fignified that vnleffe before the next day in the morning The Gafile they would absolutely render themselves, they should looke for no mercie, but should every one delivered. he put to the fivord: vpon which meffage they tooke deliberation that night: but in the morning before breake of day they hanged out their flag of truce, and so without any further composition did yeelde themselues absolutely to their mercie, and deliuered vp the Castle.

And yet notwithstanding all this, in the night time while they had this respite to pause and deliberate about the peacemaking, there were divers great and sodaine alarms given : which did breede some great outrages and diforder in the Towne. At euery which alaram, the two Lords Generall shewed themselves marueilous ready and forward.

These things being done, and this surrender being made, present Proclamation was publish-50 ed, that the fury now being past, all men should surcease from all manner of bloud and cruell dealing, and that there should no kinde of violence or hard viage be offered to any, either man, woman, or childe, vpon paine of death : permitting the spoyle of so much of the Towne as was by them thought meete, to the common fouldiers for some certaine daies. This honorable and mercifull Edict I am fure was streightly and religiously observed of the English: but how well it was kept by the Dutch, I will neither affirme, nor yet denie. For I perceiue betweene them and the Spaniards there is an implacable hartburning, and therefore as foone as the Dutch iquadron was elpied in the fight, immediately thereupon both they of Smil and Saint Lucar, and also some of some other places did not onely arrest all such Dutch thips, as dealt with them friendly by the way of trafficke and merchandife, and so conflicated their goods, but also imprisoned the Mer-60 chants and owners of the same, and as the report goeth, did intreat many of them with extreame cruelty thereupon.

In the meane while, the very next day, being the two and twentie day of Iune, all the Spanift Scaniard Eve ships which were left on ground in the Bay of Cadiz, where the great cuerthrow had beene their ships. but the day before, were by the Spaniards themselues there set on fire, and so from that time forward they never left burning of them, till every one of them, goods and all, as far as we know were burnt and confumed. This their doing was much maruelled at of vs. Not long after the fame time (three dayes as I remember) the gallies that were run on ground, did quit themselves alio out of that place, and by the Bridge of the Hand called Puente de Suaço, made their way round about the same Iland, and to by putting themselves to the maine Sea, escaped to a towne called Rotte, not farre off, but something up towards the towne of Saint Lucars, and there purchased their fatery by that meanes. Thus was this notable victory, as well by Sea as by Land, both begun and in effect performed, within the compaffe, in a manner, of foureteene houres : a thing in truth fo strange and admirable, as in my judgement will rather be wondred at then beleeved of nosteritie. And if ever any notable exploit in any age was comparable to Cafars Veni, Vidi, Vici, certainly in my poore opinion it was this.

The Towns of it felfe was a very beautifull towns, and a large, as being the chiefe See of the Bishop there, and having a good Cathedrall Church in it, with a right goodly Abbey, a Nunnery, and an exceeding fine Colledge of the Jefurtes, and was by natural lituation, as also by very good fortification, very firong, and tenable enough in all mens opinions of the better judgement. Their building was all of a kinde of hard stone, even from the very foundation to the top, and every house was in a manner a kinde of a Fort or Cattle, altogether flat-roofed in the top, after the Turhilb manner, to that many men together, and that at cale, might walke thereon: having vpon the house top, great heapes of weighty thones piled vp in fich good order, as they were ready to be throwne downe by every woman most cashly upon such as passed by, and the streetes for the most part fo exceeding narrow(I think to avoide the intollerable great heat of the Sun) as but two men or three at the most together, can in any reasonable fort march thorow them, no streete being broader commonly then I suppose Watlingstreete in London to be. The towne is altogether without stalle, excepting the Churches, yet with faire comely windowes, and with faire grates of Iron to them, and have very large folding leaves of wainfcot, or the like. It hath very few Chimnies in it, or almost none at all : it may be some one chimney in some one or other of the lower out-roomes of least account, serving for some necessary vies, either to wash in, or the like, or elle, now and then perchance for the dreffing of a dish of meate, having, as it should seeme vnto me, alwayes a greater care and respect how to keepe themselves from all kinde of great heate, the how to proude for any flore of great rofte. It had in it, by report of them that should know belt 30 it, some foure thousand and moe, of very good able fighting men, and fixe hundred horsemen at the leaft. No question but that they were well furnished of all things appertaining thereunto especially so many good ships lying there, and being so well stored with all manner of munition, shot, and powder, as they were.

Of what wealth this towne should be, I am not able to resolue the asker; but as it should appeare by the great pillage by the common Souldiers, and some Marriners too, and by the goodly ing bath often furnitures, that were detaced by the bater people, and thereby vtterly loft and spoiled, as not rold me that worth the carrying away; and by the over great plenty of Wine, Oyle, Almonds, Oliucs, Raihe had the rif fins, Spices, and other fuch Grocery wares, that by the intemperate diforder of fome of the rafter ling of a lew. fort were knocke out, and lay trampled wnder feet, in energy common high way, it should appear 40 ellers of Gold. that it was of fome very mighty great wealth to the first owners, though perchance not of any imiths house, and in hisre. fuch great commodity to the last subduers, for that I sudge that the bester part was most riotously turne gaue and and intemperately spent and consumed.

The Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday following, the Lords Generall spent in counsell about the disposing of all matters, as well touching the towns and prisoners, as also concerning all other matters, thought meete of them in their honourable wildomes, and in all that meane world did shew such honourable bounty and mercy, as is notable to be expressed. For not onely the lines bies) of great of every one were spared, but also there was an especiall care had, that all the Religious, as well bignes where menas women, should be well and fauourably intreated, whom freely without any manner of ransome or other moletiation, they caused to be safely transported ouer to Port Saint Mary, a 50 Towns in a manner as faire as Cadiz : but at that time, as the case did stand, certainely knowne to worthan angel be of no wealth in the world, and it was fome fixe or feuen miles diffant ouer against Cade, in to hisignorant a manner as Paules is against Southwarte, on the other fide of the Bay, in a part of Andaluzia, umpucity, ne subject to the territorie of the Duke de Medina Sidmia. Moreouer, at the same instant they did uer ordaned appoint that worthy Knight Sir Amias Presson, and some others in some convenient Barkes, to transport over to the faid Towne safely and in good order, a hundred or moe of the better fort of ancient gentlewomen, and merchants wives, who were suffered to put voon themselves, some of them two, yea, some three suites Apparell, with some convenient quantitie of many lewels, Chaines, and other ornaments belonging to their estate and degree.

Vpon Saturday, being the fix and twentieth, Sir Iobn Wink field knight was buried, in honoura- 60 ble and warlike manner, fo farre forth as the circumstances of that time and place could permit. At whose funerals the Nauie discharged a great part of their Ordnance, in such order, as was thought meete and convenient by the Lords General scommand. The feuen and twenty day being Sunday, in the Abbey the divine Service was had, and a learned Sermon was made thereby one Mafter Hopkins, the right honourable Earle of Effex his Preacher, a man of good learning and fareste veterance, and euen there the fame day, fomething before the Sermon was made, thele worthy Gentlemen following were Knighted by the Lord Generall. And here I am to fignifie by the way, that two of thele were Knighted three or foure daies before, and fome three or foure moe were Knighted after that time, voon certaine occasions: but yet I hold it best (and I trust without offence) to recite their names in this place altogether.

Being in Cadiz, attending upon my most honorable good Lord, I talked with certains of the Religious men, such as I found learned, whereof indeede there were some, though not very many; I talked also with the Bilhop of Cufee there, a grane aged comely man, and being of late chosen to that Bithopricke, he was as then to have gone to the ledies, had not we then taken him prifoner, and to stated his journey for that time.

It pleated the Lords generall to deale exceeding favourably with this faid Bishop of Cusco: for it was their good pleafure to give him his free paffage without any ranfome, and therewichall to let him to vinderstand, that they came not redeale with Church-men, or vinarmed men, or with men of peace weaklings and children, neither was it any part of their meaning to make such a to voyage for gold, filter, or any other their wealth and riches, &c. But that their onely comming was to meet with their dithonorable practifes, and manifold injuries, and to deale with men of war and valour, for the detence of the true honour of England; and to let them to understand, that when soever they attempted any base-conceited and dishonorable practise to their sourraigne Queen, their Mistreile, that it should be reuenged to the vetermost, &c.

In this meane space, while the Lords generall continued at Cadix, there came to them certaine prore wretched Turks, to the number of eight and thirty, that had bin a long time gally-flaues, and either at the very time of the fight by Sea, or elfe immediately thereupon, taking the opportunity, did then make their elcape, and did fwim to land; yeelding themselues to the mercy of their most honorable Lordships. It pleased them with all speede to apparell them, and to furnish them with mony, and all other necellaries, and to bestow on them a Barke, and a Pilot, to see them free.

Sc ly and fafely conucied into Barbary.

The eight and twenty day being Monday, the Lord Admirall came abourd the Arke againe, minding there to remaine for a space, as indeede he did, and vpon the aduce of his Phistian, to deale fomething in philicke, for that his Lordship found his body something out of frame. At that time it pleated his Lordship to write certaine letters to the Duke of Medina Sidonia, for the deliverance of English Captines, who were remaining in the Gallies. For by this time, it was reported, that the faid Duke was come downe in person with some power, and that he was either at Port Saint Mary,or elle at Rotta, or thereabout. His Lordship did indice the Letters himselfe, but his pleasure was, they should be turned into Latine by another ; and so to be sent (as indeede they were) in the Latine tongue vnto the Duke.

The next day after, being the fourth of July, the Lords general caused the towne of Cadiz to Cadiz have be let on fire, and raied and defaced fo much as they could; the faire Cathedrall Church, and the Religious houses onely being spared, and left vollemished. And with the Towne all such protillion, for shipping, and other things, as were serviceable for the Realmes vie, and yet were not either is convenient for vs to be carried away, as elfeluch as we shood no whit at all in neede of. were likewife at the same instant consumed with fire. And presently thereupon, their Lordinips. with as convenient speede as they could, and the whole army in such order and lessure, as they thought best, came aboord.

The next day being the fift of July, the Lords generall with all the army being under faile, and I Admirall his now making for England, and but as yet passing the very mouth of the Bay of Cadre, a Galley ful of English prisoners, with a flag of truce, met vs from Rotta, fent by the Duke of Medina Sidonia. and fent as it should seeme, one day later then his promite : but yet their flag being either not big enough, or not well placed in the Galley, or not well differried of our men, or by what other mischance I know not; but thus it was; by one of our smallest ships that failed formost, as soone 10 as the faid Gall-y came within Gunfhot, there was a great Peece discharged vpon her, and at the infant there was one man flaine outright, and two other grieuously hurt. The errour being efficial and perceived, our thip gave over immediately from any further thooting. As fooneas the Galley came neere vs, my Lord Admirall caused a gracious salutation to be sounded with his trumpets, and willed the Captaines forthwith to come aboord his ship : which they did, and then he feafted hem with a Banket, as the time and place might ferue. And then by them vnderflanding of that unfortunate mischance that had napned by the shot of the said ship, he was very forry for the same, and yet such was the mercifull providence of almighty God, that even in this mischance also, he did hold his holy hand ouer the English; and all the harme that was done did light only upon the poore Turke, and the Spaniard himselfe. When this Lord had well banqueted 20 them, he presently called for his Barge, and did accompany the faid Galley to the Lord Generall the Earle of Effer, who then did ride with his ship a good distance off: and there they being in like manner most honorably received, and intertained, the Sparift Gentlemen delivered vp their prioners the English captines, of whom some had bin there hix yeeres, some eight or ten; yea, and fome two and twenty yeeres, and vpward, and fome of them but lately taken in Sir Francis Draker last voyage to the ladies. The number of the pritoners deliuered were but nine and thirty, and no moe, and were brought in, and delivered by Don Amonio de Corolla and his brother, and by Don Pedro de Corden, and certaine others.

If any man presume here so farre, as to inquire how it chanced, that the Lord Generall rested folong at Cadra, and went no further; and why Port Saint Mary, being fo faire a Towne, and 30 fo neere to them, was forborne? and why Sheras alias Xeres? And why Resta, and the like? And why this or that was done . And why that, or this left vidone? I will not answere him with our common English proverbe, as Imighe, which is : That one foole may aske mor questions in one houre, then ten discreete men can well answere in fine dayes. But that grave ancient wiiter. Cornelsus Tacitus, hath a wife, briefe, pithy, faying, and it is this; Nemo tentauit inquirere in columnas Herculis, fanctinfq, au remerentins babitum eft de factis Deorum eredere, quam feire. Allo voon my knowledge, the chiefest cause why Port Saint Mary, and the rest, were left vntouched, was this: For that it was most certainely known, that they were Townes not worth the faluting of fisch a royall company, in which there was no manner of wealth in the world left, 40 more then bare houses of stone, and standing wals, and might well have served rather as a stale, perchance, to have entrapped, then as a meanes to have enriched.

And thus much for our journey to Cadez: for the accidents that hapned by the way, for the winning, spoiling, and burning of the said Towne, for the overthrow of the Spandh Fleete there, and for all other by-matters that hapned, as appendances to the fame, both in the time of our abode there, as also at the very last hours of our comming from thence. As for our returns home, and our entrance into a part of Portugallby the way, with the taking, spoiling, and burning of the Towne of Faraen there, and marching into the Spanift confines thereabouts, &c. I minde to leave it to some other, whose chance was to be present at the action, as my selfe was not, and shall be of more sufficient ability to performe it.

Meteranus writeth, that the taking of Cadiz had so terrified the neighbour townes, that the Inhabitants fled out of them; and Saint Lucar had beene also very easily taken, if a few ships had affaulted it; and that eighteene Spanish thip comming from the Indies ignorant of what had hapned, were English at vnawares, being very wealthy.

CHAP. 14 S. 1. Earle of Effex his Relation of the Iland Doyage.

The Voyage to the Iles of Azores, under the conduct of the Right Honorable ROBERT Carle of Essex, 1597.

The Relation thereof by the faid Earle, and other Commissioners.

10

The Generall, having by her Maiesties gracious favour the charge of her Fleete and Armie, fer out of Plimmouth in lune 1597. did both promife my felfe and give hope to her Maieftie, that I should be able to defeate the King of Spaines Fleete, commanded by the Adelantado, if I met them at Sea, or destroy it in the harbour of Ferol, if I found them there; as also to master and take all Fleetes of treasure, or of the East or West Indian Fleete, that I should finde upon the Sea in their way to Spaine: and laitly, that I should take in the Hand of Tergea; which I held an action of equall importance to the other.

With this confidence I went out, and to these ends : but none of these three being performed, it may be doubted, whether we have not through weakenesse or negligence failed of successe. For which we make answere, that if our whole carriage be examined, from the first hours to the last, it shall appeare that we have striven to attaine to every one of these with as much obstinate constancie, as any men in the world could doe, and that onely the powerfull hand of God, did binde our hands, and frustrate all our endenours.

The first for the enterprise of Ferel, we went out of Plimmonth the third of June, and stiered directly for that port, and when most extreame stormes and contrary windes met with vs. we Crossed with beate it up till all our Fleete was scattered, and many of our ships in desperate case. And because winder and The Generali thought my too foone giving over would not onely deprive the Fleete of our prin- formes. an cipall thip, but abiolutly defeate the journey; I forced my company first to abide the continuall increasing of a most dangerous leake, which I made light of because I faw that with labour of men I could free the ship as fast as the leake did grow. Secondly, I made them endure the craking of both my maine and fore mast, the one in two places, the other in three; so as we fill look. Danger of the ed when they should be carried by the boord; which was not enough to make me beare up, becaufe I knew whenfoeuer I should loofe them both, I could with jurie masts, by Gods favour.carry the ship home. And I continued so long, that my ships Okam came all out, her seemes opened, her deckes and upper workes gaue way, her very timbers and maine beames with her labouring did teare like lathes; fo as we looked hoursly when the Ortope would fall, and the Ordnance finke downe to the keele : then did those few, whom before I had wonne to stand with mee, all 40 protest against me, that if I did not within a minute of an houre beare yp the helme, I did wilfully cast away the ship and whole company.

Then onely I furfred my felfe to be ouercome : and when I came to Plimmonth, halfe her Maie- They put in to flies ships, and more then halfe the principall officers by sea and by land were put in before mee Plimmouth. for the excremitie their thips were in. And when we were all of vs gathered together againe, at Plimmouth, and had repaired all the thips but mine owne, which was fent home to Chatham to be new builded, then were we kept in by continuall fforme and contrary windes, till our victuals (which were at first but for three moneths) were in a manner all spent, and the sicknesse in the Flie boates, that carried the land armie, growne fo great, that I had order from her Maiestie to discharge the land forces, all but the thouland old Souldiers, which were drawneout of the Low Order to diff 50 Compries. By which meanes, though we were disabled to land at Ferol, to beate the land Armie charge land there, and take in the forces, which was the certaine way to command the Adelantados Fleete; forces, yet I the Generall offered her Majestie to fend in certaine thips of fire, and to second them with the Saint Matthew and Saint Andrew, and some great flye-boates, and Merchants ships, with which I would defroy the most of the enemies principall shipping, and leaue all the Queens own English built ships at the mouth of the harbour to affore our retreate. By this meanes I should hafecond time to put this project in execution. But againe ere we could recouer the Spanish coast, the Saint Marthew, by looking her foremalt, Their feeding was put backe into England, and the Saint Andrew had loft company, till at one inflant within tout, the le fight of the shoare of the Grone, Sir Walter Raleigh the Vice-admirall brake his maine yard, which cond our forced him to beare along to the Westward before the winde; and I in this second ship had such a desperate leake sprang, as when we pumped and boled with buckets as much as we could for our zard to loofe but two great Cartes, which before I had won, and for the adventuring of thefe defeate the enemies whole Nauie. Which counfell being allowed, though with refraint of mine owne going in with thefetwo thips, and an abfolute barre to hazard any other, we went out the owne lines, it grew still upon vs : and when we fought by ramming downe peeces of Beefe. and Leake remeholding linnen cloath wrong together, to ftop the comming in of the water, it came in not withstanding so strongly, as it bare downe all, and beate away enery man that stood to stop it: Then was I faine to lye by the lee, and make my company worke vpon it all night, my matter Carpenter, the onely skilfull man I had, dying at that very inflant.

And w en by the great mercy of God we had stopped it, the winde being easterly the Fleete Cape Finitiere was to tarre thot a head, as I could not recouer the most of them till I came to the Cape Finisher. c. where holding a Countell, and miffing Sir Walter Raleigh (who being off at Sea, had no plying failes to get vp) milling him, I iay, with thirty failes that in the night followed his light . and hearing that the Saint Matthew, which was our principall flip for the execution of our intended 10 enterprise, was returned, and being barred to hazard any other in her place, it was by the whole Enterprise of Countell of warre concluded, that the enterprise of Ferol was overthrowne, both because, though the winde had ferued, we wanted the thips appointed for that feruice, and if wee had had the thip; we wanted winde to get into the harbour of Ferol; for the winde blew flrongly at Eaft. which would have bin fully in our teeth as we had plied in. And now wee onely could thinke of the intercepting of the Indian Fleete, and defeating of the Adelantade: if he had put to Sea. For to take in Tergera, our land army being discharged, we had no meanes : whereupon wee bare for the height of the Rocke; hoping there (because it was our second Rende wons after Ferel) to meete with Sir Walter Raleigh. Into which height when I came, a mellage was delivered mee from Sir Walter Raleigh, by one Captaine Skebbels, that the Adelantado was gone out of Ferol with his 20

the Adelantado there, and because all our best experimented Seamen did assure vs that it was the likelieft course to meete with the Indian Fleete, to goe for the Hands of the Azores. And I fent

Fleete to Tercera, to wast home the West Indian Fleete of treasure, and that hee would attend mine answere off of the Burlingae; which message of Sir Walters was grounded upon the report of the Captaine of a ship of Hampton, which did confidently deliver it. I the Generall there calling a Counfell, tooke a resolution, both because wee hoped to meete out Pinnaces both to the Burlinges, and toward the South Cape (which was our third Rende-uous, by our first appointment) to cause Sir Walter Raleigh and all others of our Fleete to follow. And being with the lland of Tengera, I looked into the roade of Brafil, and faw there was no Fleete; whereupon we bare along it Detwixt Saint George and Gracies ator the Illand of Flores, at which we might both water and take in victuals, which in Merchants ships her Maiestie had sent after Tercers. Victuals fent vs : and where, if the Indian Fleete did come this yeere, they were likelt to fall. But when we had after them. spent at Flores some tendayes, in which time Sir Walter Raleigh and his company came vnto vs.by a imill Pinnace come from the Indies, I the Generall was told, that it was doubtfull whether the Indian Fleete came from thence or not, and if they did, they would change their viuall course, comming from and come in some height more to the Southward, till they were past these llands, where viully the Indies. they are attended. Which newes made vs resolue in Counsell to goe for Fayal, and so for Saint Michael, and to haue some nimble ships to lye off and on at Sea, both to the Southward and to the Northward. In our passige by faile, Graciosa, and Pico, we tooke such commodities and refreshings as those I- 40 lands afforded : and in passing from them toward Saint Michael, wee were told that a great ship was discouered off of Graciosa: whereupon I the Generall gave order to divide and to direct the Fleete into three places : the one to furre away East North-east, and to goe along the Northide of Tercera: the other East South east, and to goe by the Southfide of the faid Iland, and both to meete in the roade of Brafil: fo as if the Carackes, or Welt Indian Fleete should strive to recover Tercera, they should be cut off: And the third part of the Firete should ply to the Westward, which way it was faid that the great ship stood, and so to cut it off, if it longht for the roade of these three waves she must needes stand; for the winde being at North North-west, shee could

Byt as I had given this direction, there came to me a fmall Barke of Lime, whose Captaine not goe but one of their three couries. did confidently afture me, that he was the man that did follow the chase, and fetched it vp, finding it but a small ship of our owne Fleete : which made vs resolue to continue our former intended courle for Saint Michael. But in this meane time, I the Generall hailing the Captaine of a Pinnace, and willing him to call to the ships of my squadron to follow my light, and those of the Viceadmirals squadron to follow his light to the Westward (which direction I did presently after counter-mand) hee misheard, and willed some ships that were next, to sland about to the Wellward : which direction, together with his not hearing of me that, which was spoken to countermand it, made foure of her Maiesties ships, the Garland, the Marie rose, the Dread-nanght, and the Rainebow, to fland off to the West all that night : of which, Sir William Mounfon in the 63 Rainebowe fell in the night with the West Indian Flette; and it being calme, went off in his Boate to make and haile them: which heedid, and made himfelfe knowne vnto them: and straight rowing to his ship, hee shot off his Ordnance all night, and carried a light in his maint top : whereupon the other three of her Maiesties ships shood off with him, but could recreech

Fayal : which if the were kept from, Tergera was her onely place the could put into : and one of

up the Spaniards till they were gotten into Tercera Road; before which, after they had flriued in vame to get into them, they plied till my comming, which was three dayes after : for I was hard Fleet recount aboord the Welfermost part of Saint Michaell before I heard these newes.

And then flanding about, I the Generall being on head of the Fleet, met in my way with a Torcera. great Ship of the Governour of Hanana, and a Frigate of the Spanish King, manned with the faid Kings Souldiers, and another Frigate of a particular man : which three I ferched out, tooke, and Three Star & manned for the lafe bringing home of the Ship and goods, and fell the next night being Saturday, with Tercera; where finding the wind ftrong at Northwest, we plyed with as much faile as ever we could bear to get up to the road of Brafil all that night. Al Sunday, to and Sunday night, and till Munday morning wee could not weather the point of Brafil: which when wee had done, while I the Generall gathered fuch of the Fleet as were neere. I fent in a Pinnace of my Lord of Cumberland, and foure or fine of very fufficient Captaines and Mafters, to fee whether it were possible for vs to get up where the Ships rode : and they brought me backe word, it was impossible. With which I being not satisfied plied in with mine owne Ship, keeping abourd with mee two or three of the principall Officers, that wee might judge by the eye, and dispute vpon the place; and when wee were in, wee faw the bottome of the Bay (into which they were towed and warped) lay tight in the eye of the wind : fo as to lead it in with a fayle it was impossible, and to turne it vp would aske an whole day, if wee had scope, but both wee must youn either board come within a quoytes east off their Forts, and yer our Ships would 20 wend in to narrow a place, wee should have beene on shoare. Which manifest discouerie, and not the idle Shot of all the Forts and Ships, though they were verie hierall, made mee stand off agains.

And as it was impossible to doe any thing for the present, so when I the Generall called all the Captaines of her Maiethies Ships together, and enquired the effate of their charge, I found that some by the naughtinesse of their Caske and leakage of Beere, had not about two dayes, and some not one dayes drinke aboord; and that which most of vs all had did so stinke, as our men dved Want of proand fell ficke continually, and all men-protested, that if wee stayed to attend change of windes, and d. I not instantly seeke a watering place, both men and Ships were absolutely lost. Besides we faw the Galions had beene vnladen, by their shewing their white bellies so much aboue wa-20 ter, and that the Merchants Ships lay all dry on shoare; so as we had abidden the extreamest hazard of her Maiesties troupes and Ships, for the burning of a few dry vnladen Vessells.

Thus were we driven to beare the second time with Saint Michael (our chiefe end being to water, but withall to facke the Hand if we could land neere the principall Towne) where wee came to an anchor before Punta Delgada the chiefe Towne; and forthwith went in a little nimble Boat to difcouer the landing places, which we found to be exceeding dangerous. For as about ail those llands of the Acores a Westerly wind bringeth in the hollow mother Sea , so the wind then being West Southerly blew trade, and made both a great Sea gate or wash vpon the shoare. and a dangerous rode. So as besides the apparant likelihood, that our men had been all lost by the ouerturning of our Boats ypon our heads : the loffe of our Boates, which could not have beene in 40 that place avoided, had kept vs from watering, and so had beene the manifelt deftruction of the whole Fleet, Whereupon, I the Generall, leauing commandement of the great Ships with Siz Walter Raleigh (because the Lord Thomas Howard defired to land with mee) accompanied with his Lords Ship, and all the other principall Officers and persons of qualitie in the Army, I put my felfe in the imal Ships, and towed the boats at our Sterns to feeke another smal Bay on the other fide of the Point to the Eastward, called Punta de Galera or Galy Point, where there was a Land Punta de la Fange, and confequently a smoother landing.

But we putting off in this manner at eleven of the clocke at night, I the Generall in a Pinnace of Sir Walter Raleigh, called the Guiana, wherein all the Officers of the Land Army did accompany me, & the Aduenturers of quality that came out of my Ship in another Pinnace with Captain 50 Arthur Champernon came to an anchor in this Bay; but fo dangeroully as wee were put from our anchor, and had like to have beene cast away : all the rest of the Fleet being put to leeward very farre. The next morning at the breake of the day, being driven as low as Villa Franca, and there finding a good landing place, wee fet our troups on shoare; where wee found (belides many other commodities with which we refreshed our troupes) a better watering place, and a safer rode then any other thas was about that Hand. Which, together with the impossibilitie of getting our small Snips and Boats to ply backe againe fine leagues against the wind, and to meet vi that should have marched by land, and they seeing of many of the Queens principal ships driven from their anchors about, and come to Villa Franca . These accidents I say, made vs to resolue to draw all the Fleet to one place, and there to water with all poffible diligence.

And wee being there faw it was fo dangerous for our Ships to ride, the wind growing more Ochober the Southerly, as on Sunday the fifteenth of October, wee re-imbarked all our men ; the Malters of fifteenth. the Ships having before protefled, that if they were put from their anchors, as hoursly they looked to bee, that the Fleet and Land Forces were in danger to be seuered for this whole Winter: So as to have hazarded her Maietties honour, and so many gallant men, for that which was

Thus left wee that Iland, the principall Commanders by Land and Seaftaying to bring off the last man. In this meane time, while the Land Forces were at Villa France. and the Fleet at Punta Delgada, there came into that Road a Carake and a small Brasil man. The Carack presently ran her selfe on the Rocks; and after her men had saved themselves, the last ser becoming with all the goods in her, to avoid her being taken. Which Sir Walter Raleighand to those with him could not possibly avoid. The Brafil man was taken, and the Ship being found leakie, the goods were taken out and put into English Ships.

And now wee liaue given account of all our whole carriage vntill we bare for England. If our comming home scattering be obiected, wee must plead the violence of stormes, against which no fore directions, not prefent industry carr prevaile. Wee must conclude with this. That as wee would have acknowledged that wee had done but our duties, if we had defeated the Adelantado. interpreted the Feet of Treasure, and conquered the Hands of the Agores : So wee having failed of nothing that God gaue vs meanes to doe; wee hoped her Maieftie will thinke our painful dayes, carefull nights, euill diet, and many hazards deferue not now to be meafured by the event. the like honourable and inft construction wee promise our selues at the hands of all my Lords. As 20 for others, that have fet warme at home and descant upon vs, wee know they lacked strength to performe more, and believe they lacke courage to adventure fo much, Hefelles of the Afores are fituate in the Atlantike or Westerne Ocean, and doe stand betweene 37, and 40 degrees, and distant from England 400, leagues. They are in number in the part of the stand Marten, Saint Michaels, The Tercera, Gratiofa, S. Georges, Pyker Fryak Flores, and Cermo.

This name of Afores was given vnto thefe Ilands by the Portugues, of a kind of Hawkes called, 40 by them Afores (which wee name Gofbankes , and the Latines Accipitres) whereof there did breed great store in those Iles : But Ortellins fets downe this name to bee so given of the French word Efforer, which fignifieth, to dry or wither, but yeeldeth no reason withall for that Etimofomwhat ther- logy. The Netberlanders doe call them the Flemift Hands, challenging that they were first discouered by the Merchans of Bridges, who found them meerely vn-inhabited, abounding with Woods and Cedar Trees, whether they fent Colonies to people and manure them. And afterterwards in processe of time they yeelded themselves Subicets to the Portugues, who since did inhabite and gouerne there, fo as now with them they are fallen under the power of the Spanifo

Amongst these llands the Tercera's the chiefe, but is so called by the Spaniards, because it beth the third Iland distant from the Coast of Spaine. It is plentifull of Fruit and Corne, and hath some Vines growing in it. The Inhabitants doe make great benefit and trade of Oade to dye Cloth, which growes there in great plentie: The chiefe Towne in that Iland is called Angra, and hath thereunto a very ilrong Fortreffe, called Brazill, and under it a Roade for flipping to ride, but an Hauen or fafe Port for all weathers, there is not one among it their nine llands.

The Pike is focalled of a sharpe Mountaine, rising steeple wife some three miles in height and fix or feuen miles in circuit at the foot; fashioned it is vpward like an Hine, and the top therof most commonly to be discerned within and about the clouds. This Mountaine light in it (by

Also at the bottome of this Mountain, towards the East, there is a great Spring of Fresh-water, which is teen many times to iffue out flakes and itones of fire with great violence, and of the number and bigneffe of the fromes that are throwne out by the force and fource of this Spring, and what huge workes they make of the multitudes of them, they confidently doe tell frange wonders, which I will neither affirme nor deny but leave indifferent to credit as men lift.

Fazall is to called of Faza, which in the Portugues fignifieth a Beech Tree, wherewith that Iland Fazall, is faid to abound. But yet I faw there more flore of luniper and Cedar, then of any other Wood To cr Timber. For Aire and Soyle, it is as pleasant and fruitfull, as any of the other Ilands, and in it are some fine Townes with many pretie Villages ; and in this Hand there are yet remaining certaine families of the Flemis race. Gratiofa is to called of the exceeding fruitfulneffe of the Sovle and pleafant temper of the Ayte. Flores, of the abundance of Flowers that grow in it. Curuo, of Flores. the multitude of Rauens and Crowes breeding therein. And that Hand doth also breed Horses. Curus. Saint Maries, Saint Georges, and Saint Michaels, were to called of thole Saints names, vpon whole S. Maries &c. dayes they were first discouered; for such is the custome of many Nauigators, and especially of the Spaniards and Portugues, fo to call those Landes that they first make by the Saines day and name wherein they are discouered. And these three Hands for temper and fruitfulnesse are suteable with the others : But Saint Michael is the greatest of them all, Tercera the strongest, and Saint 20 Maries the neerest to the Coast of Spaine.

But now as wee come neerer to our intended purpole, for the better understanding thereof, L thinke it very necessary and pertinent somewhat to speake of the chiefe Commanders, as well by Sea as by Land, and also of the number of our Ships and Souldiers, together with the proiect and deligne of that journey then undertaken for the service of her late Maieflie, and the Honour of our Nation.

It is therefore to be understood, that Robert Denerous, late Earle of Effex, Master of the Horse Commanders and Ordnance, and Knight of the Garter : First commanded in chiefe, as well Admirall of the names, and Nauie by Sea, as Generall of the Armie by Land. His Vice-Admiralt was the Lord Thomas chiefe officers, Howard Knight of the fame Order, and second Sonne to the last Thomas Duke of Norfalke, a No-30 bleman much honoured and beloued, and of great experience in Sea service. His Reare-Admirall Was Sir Walter Raleigh Knight, Captaine of her Maieities Guard, Lord Warden of the Stanneries, and Lieftenant of Cornwall. For the Land fernice, his Leiftenant Generall was Sir Charles Blunt. Lord Meantier, Knight of the Garter, Governour of Portfamonth, and a man in high favour with her late Maieftie. His Marshall of the Field was Sir Franzen Vere Knight, a great Souldier, and Coronell Generall of the English Forces in the Low-Conneries. The Mafter of the Ordnance. Siz George Carem Knight , Leiftenant of the Ordnance of the Kingdome of England. His Sergeant Maior, Sir Ferdinando Gorges Knight, Gouernour of the Fores of Plimonth. But the particular names of all this service. the Land Captains that had charge I could never come to the knowledge of, much leffe can I marshall them orderly in this discourse. And therefore I will passe to the number of the Ships in generall, and therein name some particulars of the chiefe and principall Vessells of the Royall

And yet of all the Noblemen I will as neere as I can record their names particularly; but craue

The Land Army (befides Saylers that might be afforded and spared vponoccasion of landing) conflitted of ux-thousand able men well appointed, with ten Peeces of Artillery for the Field and Battery, with all necessiary V tentils fit for them. and as branely furnished, as ener the eye of men did behold. The lift of whole names I did ferioully inquire after, thereby to doe them right, but could by no meanes compaffe it. The end and purpose of this great Preperation was to the taking in of most of those Ilands, and especially of the winning of the Tercerast felfe, the which was refolied to have beene attempted by vs. with the other Il inds and Holds of importance, and in some of them to have placed strong Garrisons, if it had blea-Ged God to have professed the tourney with happy successe: But in the very beginning with long contrary winds, and extremitie of foule weather, the maine plot and ground of this enterprise was bindred and mainsed, as bereafter more at large shall be related in his due place. But this intended sourney for the furprifine and bolding of the Tercera alone, if it had taken effect (without any further respect to the other Hands then onely to have facked them and rafed those Fortresses they have) had beene a service of great consequence for us, and as preindicial to the King of Spaine, as any action that was ever undertaken aequist hom, fince the renolt of the Low-Countries; The which to fet downe in particular, would reasure more ample discourse, then either my leasure, or my memory can suddenly afford. But what great vie and benefit bath the Portugues did, and the Spaniards doe make of the fe Ilands is in daily experience. And ex for that bare Allegation, bow difficult and inconvenient it would bee for vs to bold a peece fo farre off: men of Warre in their true indoements would easily answere. For as well it might be demanded, how the Forts are beld in the East Indies by the poore Postugues against mightie Nations, and yet so farre remote from Christendome: And bow Rhodes and Cyprus were beretofore long kept in despite of the Turke 20 in his very before. And bow the Spaniards of late bane kept certaine places in Britaine, and Amyens, and Callice in Picardie, mangre the force of France, and never quitted them but by composition : And Godknowes bow long Don Ioim D' Lagurta would bane kept Kiniale and Beare Castle, of these bad bin places balle fa terrible, as those of the Tercera; or but the foutb part so remote from vs, as the Tercera is from Spaine. Undoubtedly their industry and patience is far beyond ours, both in getting and holding matters of more difficultie. But vaine it is to fet a price of the Beares skin before hee be flaine; although I am verily persuaded that the contrary winds onely lost vs both that, and all the King of Spaine his trea-(ure that came that yeere to the Tercera. For the lourney was carried with as great fecrecie, expedition, and Royall preparation, as ever was any these many yeeres, and they on the contrary as stenderly provided, and little doubting any fuch attempt. When all things were thus ordered, and wee furnished of 40 our necessaries after some few daies abode in Sandwich for the meeting, mustering, and imbarking of our Land Army, about the fine and twent:eth of lune, in the yeere 1 597. we fet faile from the Downes, and within three dayes with skant winds recovered Portland Rhode, where we ancored and stated some fix or seven dayes, taking in men and victualls at Waymouth, and thence we made for Plimonth, where were were to take in our freshwater, much of our prouisions, and mest of our Manners; belides that this place was appointed the very randeuous for the knitting up and dispatch of this Voyage: whether in a day and a nights sayle wee came, but with very extreme foule weather. Infomuch that even in the entrance of the very Harbour, many of our Ships falling foule one of another were forely diffretfed. The Lord Mountay his Ship the Defiance, had her Beake head stricken cleane off ; and the Saint Mathem (being a Spanish Ship of great 50 charge, very leeward and drawing much water) had like in the tempelt to have runne her felfe vpon the Rocks, had not her Captaine Sir George Carew Master of the Ordnance, beene very refolute and carefull in that extremitie, when a great part of his Souldiers and Saylers would have abandoned her , and betaken themselves to their Ship-boats, to shun the imment perill that threatned them : which he staied to the preservation of the Ship and the company. Moreover a Flee-boat of our Traine, who had in her fortie Last of Powder was likewife bulged, and all the there had beene veterly loft, had not the Mafter of the Ordnance with like care and diligence beftirred himselfe to faue all that hee might, who with the aid of many Ship-boats, as the Flee-boat was finking, faued the greatest part of her lading. Yet notwithstanding seventeen Lasts of Powder was veterly spoiled with the Salt-water, as I heard the Matter of the Ordnance him- 60 felfe affirme.

Thus with great difficultie wee arrived at Plimont, where within fix or feven daies our whole Army and Name met, and withall the shipping of the Low-Countries came to vs. And seene after having watered and taken in all our promitions and Marines, and muttered our men, we introduced nor fame, and let fayle about the nurth of July, and for two dayes space were accompanied with a faire leading North-easterly wind. In which time we received a ship-board all our directions Fireuphout the Nittle, with fuch orders and instructions as are vivally set downe by an Admirall, and a Countell of Warre, together with the places of meeting from time to time vponany Infructions contains of leparations by itormes, by fight, by guing chale, or any other accidents. This order and infittualiof delinering directions when a Fleet is a Sea-boord, and not before, is an use grounded upon many good onstauching realizate as to anoid the renealing of fecret plots, and the presention of sudden execution. As also to bun instructions. the discouraging of diners that doe often expose themselves and their adventures to Sea actions, either for lone to the Commanders, or cut of hope of Purchafe, or, for many other respects, which perhaps they 10 Would not doe if they knew indeed either the danger, or the true ends of forme preparations. And this fecret manner of proceeding bath bin often v fed by Philip the late king of Spain, in diners great expeditions, who bath beene fa precise and seuere therein, as that oftentimes the Admiralls of bis Fleet themselnes have not knowne their instructions, nor beene suffered to open them, untill they have beene thirtie or fortie leagues on their way. Wee now being in this faire courfe, fome fixtie leagues onwards our journey with our whole Fleet together, there fuddenly arose a fierce and temperatuous fforme full in our Stormes teeths, continuing for foure dayes with to great violence, as that now every one was inforced rather to looke to his owne fafetie, and with a low faile to ferue the Seas, then to beat it vp against the flormy winds to keepe together, or to follow the directions for the places of meeting. And heresome began to taste the inconvenience and perill of high Cargued Ships drawing little wa-20 ter, and ouercharged with mightie Ordnance in a furious high wrought Sea : And now also or creued & of thers found and felt the mischiese of weake built Vessells, and of rotten Tackle. For this extrea- weake hips mitie of weather was fo great, as that wee were all one after another forced backe againe, some into Plimouth, and di ers into other Harbours on that Coast, so extreamely shaken and beaten, as that the Admirall was in danger to have foundred in the Sea, having many leaks broken out voon him, and his mid-ship beame injurred in funder. And yet (as wee viderstood after) some three or foure of the formost of our Fleet (whereof the Earle of Southampton in the Garland was faid Resurre to to be one) did recouer fight of the North-Cape, but yet forced to returne againe to Plimouth. Plimouth. And many of our Gentlemen and Knights, with this boyferous and bitter entertainment on the Seas, returned extreame weake and lay dangeroufly ficke long after: Infomuch that fome of them dyed thereof at Plimonth, and were there honourably buried by the Generall. Some also were so Great ficknesses much weakened and diftempered, as that they were not able to recouer strength to put to the Seas againe, as Sir Ferdinando Gorges our Sergeant Maior, in whose place our Generall did appoint Sir A. Shely Sir Anthony Sherly; and Sir Caren Reignalls Captaine of the Forefight, to feuerely weakned with placed in Seas tickneffe, as that his charge was delinered our to Sit Alexander Rectiffe, a very forward and roome of Signal and young Gentleman, who(not long after) was flaine in the Warres of Ireland with Sit Congallant young Gentleman, who (not long after) was flaine in the Warres of Ireland, with Sir Conniers Clifford Gouernour of Connaugh. And amongst others in the beginning of this bitter florme, Sir Alexander our Treasurer Sir Hugh Biston was also to extreamely affiched with Sea ficknesse, and in so great Raidiffe.

40 on of his mind. And I thinke this lofing of our Treasurer in the beginning, was an ominous prefage of the loffe of the infinite Treasures, which afterward so valuckily patt by and escaped vs. Wee being thus with contrary winds, and extreamitie of weather beaten backe into feuerall Hauens, and yet at last meeting at Plimonth (except some few Ships of transportation, that were driven upon the Coasts of France, Wales, and Ireland, with some of our Bands of Souldiers) we fell to repairing of our Ships, and to amend those inperfections which the Seas and stormes had discouered. But withall were inforced to abate a great part of the first proportion of our Armie, as well through the derects of the Admirall his Ships, and others, as also for the waste and expence which wee had made of our drinke and victuals by the leaking of the Caske, and by the abundance of Salt-water, which was taken in during the storme, to the wetting and ipoyling of many of our prouisions. Besides that, much of our beare aboard those Victualiers that followed our 50 Fleet with divers other provisions, was very vile and vinlavoury of it felfe, by the great abule of the Victuallers and London Brewers, as well for the carelelle brewing, as for the vinfeatonable Brewers failte stinking Caske which they deliver, a fault much vied among them, and too much tolerated, confidering the infinite ra eard gaines they make of felling Thames water, beyond all good order and proportion. But as God would, at that infant when wee had discharged our Ships of that vnseruiceable poisonous drinke, there came very happily into Plimonth for a supply, a tall prize A Prize. laden with Spanish Canary Wines, which was diffributed among it the Fleet to make Benerage. And in this fort vling all industry and diligence for the letting affore of our storme-beaten Name, wee fo fitted our felues againe within eight or ten dayes, as that wee were readie for a new for-60 tune. But yet this violent and dangerous tempelt had fo cooled and battered the courages of a great many of our young Gentlemen (who feeing that the boyiterous winds and mercileffe Seas, had neither affinitie with London delicacie, nor Court bravery) as that discharging their high Plumes, and imbroydered Callockes, they becretly retired themselves home, torgetting either to not with och bid their friends farewell, or to take leave of their Generall. Andbere by the way, a little to digrefie, cacyst bours

Advice for Gallants.

I thinke it not amiffe infily to reprehend and taxe our Nation, for their unproper and vains manner of going to the Warres, and especially those that had never Seene service. For bee hee poore or rich when hee first prepares to que to firme, hee will take more care, and be at more cost to provide himselfe of a rossing Feather, and a clynicant Coat, then to bee furnished either of fit Armes, or of necessary clothing to been out wet and cold: whereby they come both to the Sea and Field service, rather like Markers then Souldiers, as men apter to bring spoyles for the Enemy, then to conquer or win bonour from him. And yet at the last the manting of their needfull habiliments in times of extreamitie, doth make them truly to sinde their owne errour and inperfisions vanitie in those idle and fruitlesse toyes : whereof I could wish a reformation as well for the bettering of our service, as also for abating such needlesse expences. Such were the narish trouves and vilded Armies of Davius, abounding in pompe and delicacy: whose millions of effeminate 10 Perlians were ener dispersed and defeated by bandfulls of the poore and hardie Macedonians. So were the feele edged Souldiers of that renowned Hanniball, metamorphofed into Cowardise and Sloth, after ther had once relished the pride and delicacies of Capua, for their conquests ever after declined. So was allo that famons M. Anthonius overthrowne and vanquifted, when he left the first Martiall discipline of his owne viet rious Country, and fastioned his Forces according to the branery and luxury of Egypt. to observe the bumour of Cleopatra, who had utterly corrupted and weak ned the courage both of him and bu leasons with vanities, excesse, and idlenesse. And such in our dayes were the glorious glisting French troupes led by the Duke of Loyeule, being for the most part compounded of the gallant Courtiers and dancing Minions of Henry the Third French King of that name, but becten and ouerthrowne at the Battell of Couttras, by the valiant King of Navarr, and an handfull of his poore Hugonotes (as they then ter- 20 med them.) Farre otherwise was the wont and manner of those worthy Romans, that by their wisdome and valour made themselnes famons, and Lords over the World, whose glorious examples wee doe more willingly read then follow. They going a warfare departed Rome in obedience and strictuesse of Martiall discipline, in sobrietie of diet and active, fitted with Armes, like men that knew that Iron and Steele were mastring mettalls over Gold and Silner, and having aschieued and performed their enterprifes, returned then home in triumph, in glory, and in pride, thining in the spoyles and riches of their vanquished Enemies, and adorned with as much sumptuous neffe as they could get, brauing therein their conquered Foes, and fetting to the shew of the world the fruits of their Valour and Transiles. Whereas wee for the most part comtrativile going out branely, and returning bome againe beggarly, leane no other testimony nor records of our Enterprises and Victorius, either to the liming or to posteriste, then the Merchants bookes wherin we are 20 deep plunged, even to the morgage or sale of our Inberstance, to convert the true bonor of Souldery into effeminate pompe and delicacy. But now to the matter: We having in this Fort repaired and supplied the defects of our weather beaten Nauie, onely attended the fauour of the winds; wherein it feemed the heavens were vtter enemies to our defignes. For during the space of an whole moneth together (after wee were againe readie) the weather stood flat opposite to our course, insomuch that wee were not able to worke our felues out of the Harbour. And in this confumption of Time we loft the best season of the yeere for our purpose, and also greatly decayed our victualls and provisions; betides the number of our Souldiers and Mariners that daily diminished. And about this time the Lord Rich finding himfelfe (as many others did) altogether vnable to indure the inconueniences of the Seas in a long and toilefome voyage, tooke his leaue of our Generall, and gaue o- 40 uer the journey. In this extreamitie of contrary windes and croffe fortunes (against which the policie and power of man could not preuaile) our Generall, with the aduice of his counfell refolued voon some other course, and to fashion his enterprises according to opportunitie, and the proportion of the meanes that remained. And thereupon cashing the greatest part of his Land Armie, hee onely retained one thousand of the best Souldiers (as was thought) most of them being Companies brought out of the Low-Countries : And also at that time hee discharged divers of the fmaller Ships, and many of the Victuallers, raking out of them fuch provisions and flore as remained to supply that which was spent, and to lengthen out the time for those leffer numbers that were to be imployed. And whileft thefe things were thus altering and ordering, and committed to the care and charge of discreet Officers : Our Admirall himselfe, with his Reare-Admirall re- 40 folued to ride post to the Court, to receive further directions or approbation in that he intended for her Maiettie, and the Lords of the Councell. Leaving the charge both of the Nauie and Souldiers in his absence, with the Lord Thomas Howard his Vice-Admirall, and the Lord Mounting his Leiftenant Generallby Land whom hee authorited, together with the Counsell of Warre, to marshall those affaires as accasion required. Have by it may be casily consectured what it is for men tequirea Print to undertake Sea-altions, that have not great meanes to follow the same, with provisions and allowance of Superfluitie to meet with lets and misadmentures, and not to depend on the bare ordinary promisons of a fer proportion. For by this great croffe of ours, wee may well take knowledge how vocertaine and difficult it is to fet out and prepare a Sea Army, except it bee on the purfe and defraies of a Private, able and willing to supply the expences and bundarances of such wast and accidents, as doe many times bappen 60 by want of windes when all things elfe are in readineffe, wherein ofientimes the enerflipping, and not taking of fix houres advantage of winde when it hath ferued, bath overshrowne a Voyage. And it Small time bath to my knowledge fo fallen out, that fome Ships that have taken a prefent gale of a day, by the begreat loffe, nefu thereof have performed their Voyage, and returning agains into the Harbour, finding others of their conforts bound for the same place, and ready at the same time, fill ficking fast at ancor; by leeling the same opportunitie.

In this absence of our Generall at the Court, there fell out such extreame stormy weather, as that it greatly troubled and puzled our Ships, both in Plimouth Road, and in the Cat Water, informuch that many of their ancors came home, and a Ship of the Reare-Admiralls, of three hundred Tunnes, called the Roe-buck, draue a ground and bulged her felfe, and so became vinferuiceable for that fourney, although much paines and care was taken of all hands, and fpecially by our Vice-Admirall himfelte in his owne person, to have preserved her, During all this time of our abode in Plimouth, (which was some fix or seven weekes) we neither found ey-to ther want or dearth of any manner of victualls, either in the Towne, where our Mariners were Good order daily resident, or in the Countrey, where the Land Army was quartered; nor yet that extreame for prousions manner of inhaunting the prices of all things vied in London, and in other places of the at Pinemania. Realme, vpon the extraordinary affembling of any fuch great troupes. And withall it is ftrange to fee, how happily that poore corner of England, doth often receive and fuffaine fo many Armies and Fleets, as doe there many times meet, without any of those inconveniences or alterations, that vpon the like occasion are found, in many other more rich and fruitfull parts of the Kingdome.

Our Generall (as is aforefaid) having spent now fixe or seven dayes in that icorney to the Court, returned with a refolution to continue the voyage to the Seas, and there (as intelligence 20 fell out) to follow the best courses in spending the rest of the Summer, and the remainder of his victualls; all forts being very forry, that fo great preparations should have veterly qualled without effecting, or attempting fomething of worth. Wee therefore now propoted to our felues, that by tarrying out till the last of October, (for the which time we were victualled after the Land Army was discharged) wee might range the Coast of Spaine, and so doe service in some of the Kings shipping, or elie lying in the height betweene the Rocke and the South Cipe, wee might intercept some Indian Fleet or Carrackes, either outwards or homewards bound, or at the least wee might meete and fight with the Adelantado, who was then faide to bee preparing of a Fleet, and ready to put to the Seas. Besides there was a brute given out, tha our Generall meant to attempt the Grome or Ferrall, and there to diftreffe fome of the 30 Kings shipping that lay in the Harbour, But what somer pretences and speeches were ginen out for that matter; both our Generall, and the wifest of his Counsell of Warre, did well enough knows. that the Groyne or Ferrall were then no morfells fit for our monthes, our Forces being fo abated, and shofe places fo well warned and promided for, by our long delayes and impediments, befides there was no likelihood; that wee would ener ingage so many of her Maiesties best Ships, within the circuit and mercy of those Harbours, upon so great disaduantage and hazard, at they must have admentured in doing any good on any of them, as they were then furnished. But wee daily fee that it is Preteners the manner and falhion of great Estates and Commaunders in the Wars, to give out and pretend many sbings, that indeed they intend not, as well to make their names the more famosu and terrible. as also many times to amaze the world with false Alarums, thereby either to hold their true purposes the more secret, or at least to give them the better speed and passage, by diverting the Enemies.

A custome neither new nor visuall : and therefore not repeated as any extraordinary observation. I , this fort all things being ordered and repaired, and our Generall returned with full Commiftion and refolution to proceed : his Lord!hip in stead of the Merchoneur (which was to weakened and disabled, as that shee could not goe forth agains this journey) shipped himselfe in the Dewrenulle, which was Vice-Admirall, and our Vice-Admirall tooke vnto himselfe the Lyon. in liew of the other. And on Wednesday, being the seuenteenth of August, 1997, a little before funne fetting, wee waved our Ancors, and fet fayle, but with much labour got out of The month Road, being forced to vie our Tow-boates, to fet vs cleere of the Harbour, the winde being somewhat flacke and scant. Notwithstanding, afterwards a sea-boord, wee finding the weather more fa jourable, held our course for the North Cape, and the three and twentieth of Sc August, wee fell athwart the Bay of Alchasher, and at last bare full in with it. The which Bayof Aking courie, the Matter of our Ship (called Broadebant) much dilliked, thinking it very inconvenient for-and perillous for to great a Fleet, fo wilfully to be imbayed upon an Enemies Coast, but yet followed the Generalls courfe. The foure and twentieth of the same moneth, being Bartholmen day, wee met a soule storme in that Bay, most extreamly violene for the time, but laited not aboue fine or fixe houres. In which forme the S. Matthew, whereof Sir George Carew, Mafter of the Ordnance, was Captaine Si Matthew two houres before day falling into an head Sea, having her Spright-fayle out, brake over-boord diffrested. her Bolt-spright, and Fore-mail close to the Partners, which for the Ships safetie was cut from her fide: In the Fore-top foure Mariners were drowned, keeping their watch there, and the fall of the Masta broke two Ancors, and carried the third into the Sea, vpon which disafter (according to the manner of the Sea) some Ordnance was discharged, and many Lanternes hanged vpon the shrowdes, to give notice of her distresse in the night. But after day light, the Garland (whereof the Earle of Southampton was Captaine) drew neere to her fuccour, who beholding with griefe, the miferable estate that this Ship was in, and likely to bee worse, for that her Mayne Mast, with the Ships rowling had loolened it felfe in the Partners, and in danger to breake in the flep (which if it had done, it would prefently haue funke her.) The Earle, though hee was not able to take all the men out of her, into his owne Ship, being in number about feuen hundred persons, yet hee was destrous and carefull to preserve as many as hee might. And to that end fent his Pinnace to Sir George Carew, praying him, and as many as hee would felect of his Company to come vnto him : which noble offer of his Lording, the Mafter of the Ordnance (as hee had reason) thantully received; but having a more tender care of the loffe of his Honour, then of the hazard of his life, would not torfake the Ship, but made election rather, to run the fortune of the rest of his company, then to prounde for the IQ particular fafetie of himselfe, and some other Captaines, and Gentleman of good qualitie. whereof hee had flore. This answere, being returned, the Earle was yet vitatisfied, and being defirous to faue as many as his Ship could well receive, and especially those of the Better fort, fent his Pinnace to the Saint Matthew againe, perswading them not wiscully to lose themselues. But the Captaine perseuered in his former resolution ; and when fome gallant men of his company would gladly have taken the Earles offer, and have left cheir conforts to their fortune, Sir George Carem would in no wife fuffer a man to depart, because it should bee no discomfore to the rest, but openly protested, that both hee. they, and the Ship, would altogether runne on fortune. Whereupon the Earle, feeing that his flaying longer with the Saint Matthew, could in no fort give her men reliefe, and fearing by flay- 20 ing too long, to be farre ingaged in the Bay of Alchafter, and to loofe his Admirall, followed the Fleet.

Narrow Seas, with her Royall Nanie, chanced in a tempest to fall with his Ship athwart a fand, whereby free was in great danger to bee bulged and lost; whereupon the Captaine and Master of the Ship, perswaded him in that extreamitie and danger, to take the benefit of his Pinnace, and save him-

These brane resolutions have beene also vsed heretofore oftentimes, by such as have commanded in the Royall Ships, and sometimes by the Admiralls themselves. Sir Idm Partot, Sont to the Seas a Fleet of her Maieftier Ships , whereof Sir Iohn Partot was Admirall, in the 40 Reuenge, and Sir William Gorges, my Father, in the Dread-naught Vice-Admirall; who when they had performed their service on the Coast of Ireland, and other places, in their returne home-Drinalla Pirat, wards, the Vice-Admirallebanced to take an English Pirate, whose name was Derivall, a very valsant and shilfull Mariner. This Derivall, the Admirall tooke abourd his owne Ship, and kept him ner thenman. prisoner in the Bilbowes. But so it fortuned, that a great forme arising in the Narrow Seas, the Fleet was scattered, and Sir Iohn Parrats Shippe ravne upon a Sand, where, a good time lice did dangerously beate, having strucken all his Sayles, and with enery Billow was like to bee bulged. And in this desperate extremitie they saw no other way left, but bow they might with Boates, and Rafts faue the men, and for sake the Shippe; some being of one opinion, and some of another, as bope or despaireled them. This Derivall being then prisoner in the Bilbowes, fent word to the Ad 10 mirall, that hee knew well the lying of that Land, and would direct them a way how to faue the Ship and all the company, if hee would promise him on his Faith, and Honon, to get his Pardon when hee came home in recompence thereof. The Admirall willingly accepted the profer, and ingaged his Faith for the performance of his demand, and taking him out of the Bilbowes, had him bestir bimselfe. Whereunto Derivall answered, In bope you will saue my life, according to your Word and Faith given, I will (by Gods belpe) Saue all yours : but if I shought otherwise, I had rather here drowne with so good company, then bee hanged at home alone. The Admiral bidde him not doubt it, but follow bis businesse. Whereupon Derius presently commanded the Master and Mariners, to horse up all their Sayles they could make to the very Battend, which was cleane contrary to that they had done before. (for fearing the mighty winds , they had strooke all their layles , and folis thumping on 60 the Sands) but now the strong gate hausing silled all their sayles, still as the billow role, it draue the Ship forwards, and so in foure or five shoues, being driven with the violence of the windes and the wants, with his stirrages be cut cleane through and athwart the Sand, and floated into the Sea. This was a di fortaleremed e for a de perate danger; for if bee had not vied the benefit of ber failes, and curried ker ashwart (the Ship being a strong built vessell) shee would still have layer tumbling on the Sand, and at last broken her selfe. Notwithstanding this good service done by Derivall, when hee came home, his remard was an halter, bu offence being remembred, and his defert forgotten: and get the Admiral did Derivallhanbis best to fane bim according to bis promife. But furely (in my powe opinion) in fuch cales a State figuid ged against doe well, for examples fake, and for incouragement of others, to take notice of such extraordinary feruices. and to remember that vertue deserves no leffe to bee cherifhed, then vice to be chastised, and that to Advice. whom a State committeeth the trust or confidence of a Generalls or Admiralls place, it should also allow bim the honor, to make good his word for any thing, that concernes the advancement of the (ervice where-But I will returne againe to Sir George Caren , whom we left tottering in his wrackt Ship, and in a great storme, for I have occasion here to stand somewhat vpon the Relation of his hard aduentures after his difafter, because I have heard it by many that were with him in the Ship, often, and at large discoursed of ; and himfelfe being a princicall Officer in the Action, shipt in a vessell of great charge, it cannot bee reputed as a digression, or impertment from the matter, for small is the reward of those that so resolutely engage, and expose their lives for the feruice of their Prince and Countrey, if they should not bee allowed the comfort of honourable Storyof the memory. After the departure of the Earle of Southampton from the S. Mathew, as aforefaid, ma- S. Mathew. ny Counfells in this diffressed Ship were held for the cutting of her Mayne Mall over-board, which with rowling was growne at last to be so toose, as that it was continually seared that it 20 would breake in the Stop, and when the Carpenters were ready to begin that worke, the storme ceased, and the Seas began to calme, wherein finding comfort they made of a space top Math a lury Fore-malt, and the Pinnace sayle served for a Fore-sayle. In this pittifull estate the Ship still running before the winde, which shee could not otherwise doe by region of her small Fore-sayle, within foure dayes after by the goodnesse of God, came tafely to an anchor at the Ile of Saint Martreines in France, where Sir George Carew made all the meanes hee might to get a new Mait, whereby hee might follow the Fleet. But vpon S. Matthew all that Coast hee could not prouide himfelfe of any to fit fo great a Gallyon. And therefore brough home of necessitie having setled his Mayne-matt, he returned for England, and within few dayes arri-ued in the Hauen of Portimouth.

Hee thus having brought the Saint Mathew (beyond all hope) fafe within a good Harbour, not any thing dilamayd with palt perills , prefently dispatched Captain Francis Stingiby in post C.Fr. Slingiby. to the Court, to aduertife the Lords of her Maiesties Councell, of the misfortunes which had befalne him and there with all humbly defired that he might be permitted to take her Marelies thip Sir Garre Cacalled the Aduenture, which was then in that Harbour, and in her to follow the Fleet, which being granted he shipped himsel'e in her, and according to the instructions (which were delivered tures in the to every Captaine of the Fleet) hee fought for the Admirall at the Groyne, which was the first Auuentare, Randenous let downe in the instructions aforesaid, from thence hee made to the Rocke, and not finding the Fleet at either of these places, he failed to the Cape Saint Fincent, where it was resolved by the Lord Admirall and Councell of the Warre to stand off and on, and to attend the comming home of the West Indies Fleet. There hee had intelligence by a small man of Warre of Planouib, that the Generall with the whole Fleet was at the Hands of the Afores, whereunto he directerh his courfe. And when hee was (as hee efteemed) within one hundred leagues of the Tercera, he had intelligence by another fmall man of Warre, in the which a man of Sir William Brookes was Captaine, that followed the Fleet for purchase, that the Lord Generall in his opinion was at that time vpon the Coast of England, for hee had left the Hands fourteene daies before the Aduenture, and he did meet; vpon which intelligence he changed his course for Englard. And not farre from Vihent in the night, hee fell into the middeft of a great Spanift Fleet, Spanift Fleet, which had bin with the Adelantado vpon the Coast of England, & then homeward bound; but the night being formy, he escaped that perill, and yet not without great danger. For one of the Spanifo Gallions which was tuppoted to bee the Admirall (for thee carried a mightie Lanthorne in her Poope) paffed so neere to the Aduenture, that their Mayne-yards in the end were foule one of the other, so as they hardly aucyded their stemming of their Ships, which in all likelihood must have sunke one, or both. With this storme the Adnessure was forced into Ireland, into Corke Hauen in Munfter, where hee repaired his Ship of certaine leakes thee had, and also corke H uen. mended her Mayne Maft, which was ftrangely fhinered with a whirlewind. And then putting to Sea againe for England, a little before day, in a fforme the Ship was driven vpon the lee shoare Danger by within Beachy in Suffex; and not being able to double that head land, in the endeauouring wher- florme. of all the Sayles, being by violence of weather rent from the yards, to auoid running upon the Rockes, they came to an anchor, every Billow overwashing the Ships head, that neither by pum-

60 ping, nor lading out of the water, they were able to free her : and the men in her to tired with labour, as no hope of fatetie was left. The last remedy was to cut all the Masts and Tackle ouerboord, which lightened the Ship, and by that meanes shee was preserved. After thirtie houres of this extreame perill, the florme ceased, and so by Gods fauour with a lury Mast, which was made of the Boat Matt, and the Boat Sayle, having no Matt nor anchor left but one, he arri-ued voon Allhollenday in the Downes, beyond all expectation of the Masters and Mariners, who made no other reckoning then to be loft.

And thele were the accidents that separated Sir George Carew from the Fleet, in the huge stormes on Baribolmem day, in the Bay of Alchaster, as aforesaid. In which storme the Saint Andremat that time spene her mayne top Mait, and lost ws for three or source dayes, but all the rest of the Fleet, (except our Ships, which carried the Lon- Country Souldiers) kept together in the Bay. And to many as came to vs after at the Rocke, were beaten also from the Admiral in that Bay, and fo were many other Ships, which found vs after at the Rocke, to the number of thirty and odde Course of the favle. Whereupon a rumour was afterward raifed, that the Reare-Admirall was gone away with thirty fayle from the Fleet, to the ouerthrow of the intended feruice. Our Admirall fill bare in Io with the Land, & the most part of the Fleet followed the same course. The next day we made the high Land of Portugal, and within some three houres after, Cape Prior, where our Admirall with diners other of the Fleet, did beare in so close aboord the shore, as that all the Country over began to kindle fires. The which manner of disconering our selves (as I do remember) was much noted by divers good Souldiers, as well by Sea, as Land : for indeed it was reputed no great policie, nor discretion in vs. to runin so close aboard the shoare, if we had any secret or sudden exploit to performe en that Coast, as it was Brau dos often pretended. For that Branado of ours, did but give them more marning to provide for themselves, and to prevolcaionable. went vs. And I baue observed that those braning bumours, have of late yeeres been the bindrance, and lolle of many good fortunes, as well in Sir Francis Drake bis two last Voyages to the Indies, and Sir John Norris in bis to Lisbon, by ftaying at the Groyne, as also in others, oc. Towards the enening, we put roome agains from the Coast, and beat up and downe in the Bav

to free vs from thence, expecting a wind wherewith to double the North Cape, which, within two or three dayes wee had, and so passed along within ten leagues of the Coast by Ferrall, the Grome, and Cape Bealins, and so weathered the North Cape. And as the Fleet together was passing along towards the South, almost as farre as the Iles of Bayon, our Ship (the Wastfoite) being then a middelt them all, on the feuen and twentieth of August, broke her mayne Yard in funder in the very middeit by the Parrell. Whereupon we prefently discharged a Peece of Ordnance, and made our misfortune knowne to our Admirall, who himselfe spake with vs, and also at that time had a great leake broken out vpon his owne Ship. And there by his order and permission we were willed to repaire our mayne Yard the best wee could, and vntill it were finished in 30 that birth to goe on with our Fore-fayle towardes the Rocke before the winde, whiles in towardes the Coast, and so, wee there to ply up and hee with the Fleet would downe about the height of the Rocke, vntill his Lordship came vnto vs, or during the dayes limited in the generall instructions, and thence to passe onwards to the South Cape, and there to remaine according to the faid directions. And yet wee did not for two dayes after depart, though to our great difease; for wee wallowed in the trough of the Sea, and rowled fo extreamely, as that wee had like to have loft our mayne Mast alio. After this order ginen, wee presently tooke adunce the best wee could, and set our hands together for the repayring and finishing of our mayne Yard, being broken in the Parrell, a very euill place to amend : wherein that night wee could doe little good , more then to free the Sayles and Tackle 40 from it. Notwithstanding the very next morning the Admirall fent a commandement to vs. that wee should presently attend him with all speed, for that hee meant to put in with the Land : The which wee were altogether vnable to performe , our mayne Yard being in funder, and impossible it was so suddenly in one night to repayre it, and without it, wee were not able to worke vpon a wind, (as all Mariners know) having but our Fore-fayle and Mizen, and the winde almost of the Land, so as it had beene but an idle labour, for the more we striued, the faster wee fell off. Besides, if wee could have layd the Land with that fayle, it had beene a madnesse to put our selues voon the Enemies Coast in that estate, for if the wind had then changed to the West, we wanting all our mayne Sayles, must have yeelded

Vice-Admirals

Whilest wee were thus diftressed on our Enemies Coast, Sir William Brooke, Captaine of the Dread nought came vnto vs and tarried with vs, out of his owne charitie and friendly disposition, for there were no directions (that wee heard of) given to any to accompany vs in that distresse. Onely the Vice-Admirall (of his owne noble care) very kindly and honourably hayled vs, and offered what comfort and helpe hee could give vs; some others afterwards did the like. But we having yeelded due thankes to the Vice-Admirall for such his noble care and curtefie defired no more company, but wished all others of our Squadron to repaire vnto the Admirall, contenting our selves with Sir William Brooks in the Dread-naught, and two or shree other small men of our 60 owne Squadron, which of their owne accord followed vs. Neither did we in all this time intreat the company of any one Ship more to stay with vs, albeit the contrary was very fallly suggested and reported in a strange manner of phrase, which was, that the Reare-Admirall vpon the breaking of his Mayne-yard, willed all his Squadron and those that loued him to keepe him or perished So as in regard of this necessitie, we did for two daies, as aforesaid ply vp and down, 50

vntill wee had repaired our Yard, and fitted our fayles vntoit, being now fine foot shorter then company, and not to follow the Admirall. But as this was a monitrous entruth, raifed out of malice to the Reare-Admirall, thereby to inuegle the Admirall against him; so the authors were after wards athamed of their impudent flander, when the truth was made manifest at our meeting againe with the Admirall and the Fleet at the Hands of Afores: As foone as wee had mended our Maine-yard, wee bare in with the Coaft, making all the inquiry that we could for our Admirall and the Fleet, but could not have any intelligence of them. Whereupon casting many coniectures, weefent a small Man into the Iles of Bayon, but could learne no newes of him there. Then wee thought verily that hee would hold on his courie for the South-Cape according to the generall instructions, we well knowing that hee could not then TO put in for Ferrall or the Groine as was afterward colourably fuggested) the wind being flat against him , and our whole Fleet having over-shot it neere twentie leagues before that our Yard was broken; and therefore it was rather a pretence to feeme defirous to vndertake it, then that there was any possibilitie to performe it. For besides that weehad overshot it, and the wind contrary, lo as we could not recouer it again, both those Ships were wanting which were chiefly defigured to bee aduentured in that feruice, namely the Saint Andrew and the Saint Mathem, two S. Mathem and huge Gallions of the King of Spaines, that were but the yeere before taken at the facke of Cales, S. Andrew aand onely faued of fortie or fiftie faile that were then beaten and burnt to ashes. Vpon these reas ken at cadity, fons wee shaped our course for the Rocke, plying vp and downe in that height for a few dayes. In which time wee gaue chase to divers Spanish thips which wee beate into Cast-keyes, and caused and some of them to runne on ground, wee being so neere Cast-kerer as that we could number divers tall ships that road there vinder the Fort. Here wee housely expected our Admirall, being the very appointed place for a Randeuous to all the Fleet, and would gladly have met with him, being of our felues but a weake force to lye on that Coaft, if the Spanish Armado had been abroad. as wee were to suspect it was, or in a readinesse at the least, And therefore it was fouly rallined or militaken of those that gaue it out, and carryed the newes into England, that wee had of purpole left and lost our Admirall to range the Coast alone at our pleasures. For being no stronger then wee were, and lying as wee did in the height that was appointed by the generall instructions to the whole Fleet, it was not to be imagined in any fenie or reason, that wee defired to leave or lofe the Fleet upon the breaking of our Maine-yard to neere the Coast of Spaine, and 30 the Adelantadoes Forces then bruted to bee abroad. But indeed our Reare-Admirall commanded all our Squadron to follow the Generall, because he pretended to adventure upon the Groine. Yet we hoped, and so hee promised, that either hee would come off to vs againe where wee lay, or find vs without faile at the Rocke, but did neither : for there were three places of our Randenous appointed, if any separation happened. The first at the North Cape, and failing there, then at the Rocke, and failing there, then at the South Cape. Now when all fuch ships as were fundred by tempeft in the Bay of Alcafber, failed of their Admiral at the North Cape, they then fought him at the Rock, where they found the Reare-admiral, who held them altogether, and brought them to the Generall at the Hands; else had they all returned home, after they had missed of some Admis rall to command them at the third and last place of meeting : for none of our Fleet went for 40 farre to the Southward. Whilest wee thus stayed about the Rocke, the Caruells of Lisbone, and of the parts thereabouts? would daily come iwarming about vs like Butter-flyes, so neere, as that we might cast a stone into lome of them, and yet could wee neuer catch any one of them, to yare and nimble they are. But if wee would have bestowed any musket or great shot on such bables, wee might peraduenture have killed some of their men, or sunke some of them, which wee forbare in hope to draw them to vs oftner, and then if any calme had happened, we might have taken them with our Boats, and by them gotten some Intelligence. At the same time also there came to the Rocke neere thirtie faile of thips of our owne Victuallers and Transporters, among t whom was Captain Sidner, Captaine White, Captain Berry, and others, some of whom wee tooke into vs out of their owne weake thips; who having loft the Generall in the Bay of Alcafber, in the forme aforefaid, fought him first at the North Cape; and milling him there, came to the Rocke, according to the generall instructions, and they by chance finding the Reare-Admiral at the Rocke, were held together till wee either found or heard from the Generall. After we had thus plied up and downe about the height of the Rocke, and yet determined at last to have passed on for the South Cape, there came athwart vs a small Barke of England, with whom wee communed, inquiring what newes in the South parts where they had beene. They told vs, that they had lately met a Man of Warre bound for England, that had taken an Indian man, naming the Captaine, who (as they faid) informed Falle intellithem for certaine that the Atlantado was gone for the Ilands, to weft home the Indian Fleet. Entifleman. This report seemed to carry with it good likelihood of truth, for we beard before that the Atlantado was

60 preparing to the Seas, and also were certain, that both the King of Spaine his Treasure, and other Indian Fleets were to come bome that yeere. Besides, we did not suspect that one of our owne Countrey would be so lewd, or durst presume to informe her Maiesties Nauce, with a meere falfe coyned suppossion, as indeed this was found to be afterward. For such a dishonest treacherous part may sometimes turne to a great inconnenience, in discriting a whole Fleet by a false intelligence, and is a point better fitting a Traitor then a true man, and well deserve to severe and publike punishment for an example to all other. For although (ea-furing men will now and then (as doe Poets and Painters) take liberty to fabi net it is no good selling nor dalying with Princes affaires in that fort, and therefore if I could call to mind the Captaine or Masters name, surely I would doe them the curtesie now to remember them.

Hereupon our Reare-Admirall thinking it very require, and his dutie to informe our Admirall of this advertisement as soone as might bee, ernestly required the same Man to ply un towards the North-Cape, all along it the Coait as well as he could, (because it lay in his way homewards bound) to find out our Fleet, & to informe our Admiral of this Intelligence. But he answered in the hearing of all the company, that the Captaine that had taken this Indian. Prize, had already fent the Admirall a Letter to the lame effect. Yet the Reare-Admirall for the more furetie 10 (doubting that a Letter might miscarry, or that no such Letter might bee sent, being but an excule of this Man to put off the trouble of feeking out our Fleet, being a matter of great imporrance) commanded one of his small Men (that at that time followed vs) to deliner the same adpertifement to our Admirall, as hee had received it by word of mouth; and to vie all diligence to feeke him, and the Fleet, and to deliver the report truly in manner as it was related, and withall to fignifie vntoliis Lordship, that wee there attended him in that height according to the directions, and so would observe all places and times appointed, and that in such fort his Lordship should be fure to heare of vs, vpon any occasion to wait on him. This message, and Messenger could fufficiently witnesse, that we had no intent nor defire to abandon the Fleet, or to sequester our felies, being at the placefet downe in the generall inftructions. This small Man that had this 20 message in charge to deliuer to his Lordship, the next day (by good hap) found out the Fleet, and youn delinery of this newes, within two dayes after, our Reare-Admirall received two fenerall Letters to one effect from the Admirall one after another. First fomewhat taxing him for not writing, then for his absence and withal requiring him presently to follow him to the Hands, whether he faight would (by Gods helpe) halten to find the Adelantado, not doubting but to giue his Maftreffe a better account of that feruice then the Adelantado fhould yeeld his Mafter: fo. or much to that effect the Letters went, for I my felte read them (with the Reare-Admirall his permiffion) and therefore can truly report their contents.

Voon this fuldaine and itrict meffage, we presently altered our determination from going to the South-Cape, to hast to the Ilands, and the fore we prefently gave notice to Sir William Brooke 20 and the rest of our conforts, of our Admirall his Letters, and what way he meant to take, and io inflantly without any turther delay, we shaped our course for the Ilands. But in this passage of doubted with every high blaft or wind, that it would have beene blowne over-boord. This fudden difatter much troubled vs, and the more, to thinke what vnequall conftructions would be made thereof. Wee acquainted all the rest of our conforts with this late befallne mischiefe, and desired Sir William Brooke in the Dread naught to carry the light for all the company feeing that curiling 40 was to defective that we must needs stay to fee if we could make the Mast serviceable, but would yle all our best means to come speedily after, desiring him, and all the rest to hast to our Admiral, and to fignifie our misfortunes, and withat to make the more speed, for that if the Adelantade were at the Ilands, our Admirals Forces would be wel helped by their companies, & fo for a few hours, we and our conforts parted, only we retained two little small Men with vs for our better comfort. Yet not with flanding this order and direction given, so great were our delires to go on, & our labor fuch, as that the same night wee had new fined our crased Maine-mail with a spare Maine top Matt that lay by vs, and then to plied our fayles as that the next day towards the evening, wee ouertooke Sir William Brooke againe, and the reft of our conforts halting towards the Hands as was directed. And on the eight of September, in the yeere 1597, being Thursday, wee made the lle 50 called the Tercera, and weathered it to the North-west; where we met with an English Merchant that came from Saint Michaels, and had layen trading about those llands some fix weekes together, but could not tell wany ne wes of our Admirall and the Fleet, albeit they were paffed by but two dayes before. Which showes how easie a matter it is for shipping to passe by amongst those llands unscene, and bow difficult it is to find out such Ships among those lands as would helter themselves from men of Warre, and couct not to becmet withall, feeing that to great a Flee: could paffe by unscene or unheard of, by one that came inst from the Hands, at the same time that our Generall came thither. And therefore it is a necessary observation for all such men of Warre, as would meet or intercept any signing, that doth touch at those llands, or do come from thence to keep in the maine sea and so to attend their comming forth, and not to puzzle themselves with running in amongst those llands to seeke for purchase, ex- 60 cept they have others of their conforts lying in the Sea at the receite, if they chance to flip by, which is east-Indone. This Merchant informed vs of certaine West Indian men, and two Carracks, that a month before had touched there, bound for Spaine. And by this Merchant wee wrote into England how affaires went. In pailing thus onwards we discovered Saint Georges Hands, and there we diffracthed two of our final men, with charge to fearch about the Islands for our Fleete, and to entorme our Admirall, that we were going for Flores, and Cuernos, in hope to meete him there. withall willing those imall men to come thither vnto vs. And yet I remember many in our Ship were doubtfull, and laid great wagers, that our Fleet was not yet come to the lilands, for that this Merchant could make no report thereof.

Whilest we were before Saint Georges, we were very much becalmed for a day or two, and the weather extreamely hot, infomuch as the winde could not beare the failes from the maffes. but were faine to hull in the Sea, to our great ducontentment, that before had yiel fisch great diligence and hafte to meete with our Admirall, and the rest of the Fleete. Notwithstanding to the winde began againe to be favourable, and to fetting forwards, the next of the Ilanda that we maile, were Grainfa, Pyke, and Fayall. And mive ranged by Gratiofa, on the tenth of September. about twelve a clocke at night, we faw a large and perfect Kainbow by the Moone light, in the biomeffe and Rainbowe by forme of all other Rainbowes, but an colour much differing, for it was more whitifi, but chiefly inclining tring in color to the colour of the flame of fire. Thus made us expell fome extruordinary tempessuous meather, but in- from these or deede it fell out afterward to be very calme and hot. This Rainbow by the Moone light I doe the rather the Sunne. take occasion to note; for that I remember that Plinic in his natural! History of the world, Beaking of Meteors, devictio any Rainbow to be feene, but opposite to the Sunne, and never in the night feason: and yet (faith be) Attitotle reported for a raritie, that in his time there was a Ruinbow frene by nicht but withall affirmeth, that it could not be but at the full of the Moone. But in these parts they are very or-20 dinary, as well when the Moone is not at the full, as otherwise, which maketh me to thinke , that thefe !land were never knowne to the Greekes, nor to the Roman, nor that those former ages did truely conceine or know many things, that in thefe latter times have ben disconcred. For although Salomon faith that nothing is now under the Sunne (which we doubt is malt true for all things have had their being fince the first Creation) jet all things have not bin known in all places, and to all men alike. But as the long lines of men in the first ages (no doubt made their hummledge the greater by the benefit of long observation on : (a againe, we in these latter dayes, by the tradition of their knowledge, left onto vs, and also by the discovers of those things , which time bath revealed, have found out many fecrets to them unknowne. But

The same night by the light of the Moone (which was then almost fallen with the Horison) 30 we might elpic certaine is les passing towards the Eastwards of Graviosa; whereupon we gave order that a couple of our imall men should follow, and give them chase, as we in the Wafffprobe likewise did, and hung out two lights to cause Sir William Brooke in the Dread-naughs, and the rest of our conforts, to hold the same course with vs , but wee were followed by none of them. which when we perceived and the Moone-light being now by the earth fo shaddowed from vs. as that we could hold no longer fight of these failes (which had thrust themselves in amonest the Islands) we cast about . and held on our former course. But by this chaling for this lettle time (euen as we suspected) we loft the Dread-nanght, and most of our conforts, and neuer faw them after, votill we met them with our Admirall, and the reft of our Fleete at Flores; whither with feart windes we came, on the foureteenth of September, and then discouered all our Fleete. But They come to

40 at the first making of them, we stood somewhat doubtfull, whether it was our owne, or the Spa. the Flee. nilly Armady, they being as farre from vs. as we were able to ken out of our maine top, and therefore we did itill ftrine to keepe into the weather, in approaching neere voto them, voull at laft, we perfectly made them to be Englift bottomes. As foone as we were come within two leagues of them, the Seas being very calme, our Reare-admirall, my felfe, and some other Gentlemen of our ship, went aboord our Generall in a Barge, and dined with him, who seemed to be the toy- Entertainment fulleft man living for our arrivall, protefting, that he never belowed that we would leave him, al- by the General though divers perswaded him the contrary; and acknowledged that hee was forry for a Letter which he had written by Master Robert Knolles into England against vs. promising presently to make a dispatch of purpose, contrary to the former; having also found toone after by examinaso tion, that not any one of their thirtie and odde failes of victuallers, and transporters, which came

now with vs. were drawne from him by the Reare-admirall, but that they all came to the Rocke to feeke the Generall, and there by chance found vs , who drew them to the Islands, much against their defires, being most of them in great diffresse. Afterwards wee enquired abourd our Generall, what had paffed with them fince we departed, upon the breaking of our maine yard, before the Illes of Bayon; and we learned that in all this time, they had done nothing but ranged the Seas to jecke the Adelantado, and were come to the Hands but three daies before vs, where the Governours of the Islands of Flores and Cuerues, came to our Generall.

The Inhabitants of which two III ands fremed to be but a wretched needle kinde of people, and II his rans of yet as crafty, as bale, and bare. Thefe very fubmifly humbled themselves vnto our Generall, Farage Corner 60 bringing with them Fruites, Hens, and other fre'h victuall, imploring fauour, and mercie at his hands, and that he would vouchfafe to give them his fafeguard under his hand, to protect them from the spoile, and invasion of our men : ailedging for themselves that they were an harm. and were anciently subjects to the Poringals, friends to our Nation, and nothing guiltie of the Hothlitie betweene vs, and the Spaniards, who (as they faid) did viurpe, and tyrannize both no uer the Portugals and them. Our Generall heard, and entertained them, with great curtefie. Eurle of ETes, and told them that he came not to afflict poore men, but was fent by the Queene his Miftris. to he, niver and chaftile the intollerable pride and intolencie of the Spanish, whose Indian Gold and riches. were imploied onely to the oppression, and disturbance of divers Christian States and Princes; and these Islands being the chiefe places of retrait and refreshing for his Fleetes, that passed betweene Enrone and the Indies, were great meanes, and helpes, to further their boundlesse ambition, and twrannie, with other discourse to that eff. ct. And so inquiring of them very precisely, the times. and featons that the Indian Fleetes, both inward, and outward bound, held in paffing by those tea Illands; in conclusion gaue them divers gitts, and his Protection in wrighting vader his hand and feale from the violence of our Forces, which was very respectively observed, even to the value of an Hen, which no man durit take without paying for. Such was the moderation and bountie of this noble Gentleman our Generall, indued with many good gifts, though at the last he failed After we had bin abourd our Generall, and dined with him, he acquainted our reare Admirall with the many coniectures, and furmifes of our absence, and withall named vnto him some of those men that had taxed him secretly with strange reports, and yet pretended to loue him. which he protested (as aforesaid) he neuer beleeued, but thereby the better observed some mens frandalous, and cankered dispositions. In this fort did our Generall receive and welcome our reare 30 Admirall, with the greatest kindenesse, and inward familiaritie that might be, and all the Gentlemen of his Companie with honorable cuttesie, to the great dillike and hart-burning of some that much enuied that liking, which of his owne disposition, our Generall did beare vnto him : For albeit the Earle had many doubts and lealousies buzd into his eares against the other, vet I haue often observed, that both in his greatest actions of service, and in his times of chiefest recreations, he would ever accept of his countell and company, before many others that thought themsclues more in his fauour. And as touching the Aduertilement that was sent into England, from the Illes of Bayon, by Master Robert Knolles, in a Pinnace called the Guiana, concerning vs, that were forfaken, and left alone voon the breaking of our Maine yard: whereupon was pretended that many great exploits should have bin performed vpon the coast of Spaine, if wee had not fal- 30 len from them (as was vntruely fuggested and reported) his Lordship promised the reare Admirall then, to fend another advertisement, how we were all metagaine, and had bin formerly seuered by misfortunes onely, and not by any wilfull default in the reare Admirall, as was doubted. And that Aduertisement sent formerly by Master Knolles, we well knew proceeded not out of any particular malice of the Generall to vs, but onely to take that as a fit excuse to free himfeife from the enterprises of Ferall, or the Groine, which he had promited her Maiestie to vodertake, but faw it impossible to performe, by reason of the former crosses, and our long stay in Plimmonth; and therefore was glad to take the opportunity of any colour to fatisfie her Maiestie, and to discharge himselse of that burthen, which we did all perceiue, and therefore did striue the lesse the publish our Apologies, or to contest with a man of his place and credit, which (though in a 40 right) had bin but booteleffe, and meere folly; and therefore we left him to his best excuse, and our apparant innocencie. And for the more plaine manifesting of the Message, I have thought it not amiffe, here to infert the true copie of the Instructions verbatim, that our Generall fent by Master Robert Knolles into England, upon thefe accidents before the Ifles of Bayon.

That we weighing Ancor and fetting faile from the found of Plimmouth, the seventeenth of this moneth of August, having sometimes calmes, but for the most part, Westerly and Northeasterly windes, we fellon thursday, the fine and twenty of this moneth with the Land, which is to the Eastward of the Cape Ortingall, which land we made in the morning about ten of the clocke, and food in with the shoare, till three in the afternoone. Then finding the winde scant to ply to the Southward, I stood all night into the Sea, and the next morning in against to the Land. By which boords, by reason of the head-sea, and the 50 bare minde, we got nothing. On Friday night I stood off againe to the Sea, and about midnight the minde comming all Northerly, we got a good flant, to lye all along the coast : on Saturday in the morning, Idifcouered the Saint Andrew, whom we had loft fight of two or three dayes before. I have with her, and had no sower got her up, but Sir Walter Rawleigh shot off a peece, and game us warning of his being in di-Streffe. I presently bare with him, and found that he had broken his maine yard. Whereupon I willed him to keepe along the coast that birth that he was, sill be got in the height of the North Cape, and my feife baning a desperate leake broke out as ener flup swam withall, which I was fame to live by the lee, and feele, to stop it, which how it held us, you can report : and (God be thanked) that night we onercame it, and Stopped it. The next morning we all came to Cape Finister, Sauing the Sain: Maschew, who upon breaking of her fore maile went bome : and the Waltipight with whom the Dreadnaught went without flop to 60 the South Cape. This is all that is hapned to me. If her Maiestie aske you, why there was no attempt upon the Fleets at Teral, you may fay, I neither had the Saint Matthew, which was the principall hip for that execution, nor the Saint Andrew, till mine owne ship was almost sunke, and I not able to make faile, till Sir Walter Rawleigh with his owne fhip the Dreadnaught, and very necre twenty faile were sone. Wee are now some to be for the Indian Fleete, for by Spaniards wee bane taken, wee finde the Adelantado is not put to Sea this yeere. Of our successo, ber Maiestie Shall from time to time be aduertiled : you hall acquaint Master Secretarie mith this instruction; and both to him and all our friends you must excuse our baste.

CHAP.14. S.2. Mutuall hatred of Hollanders and Spaniards.

We being thus met all at Flores, defired our Generali to give vs. and our conforts leave to water there before we departed thence, as his Lordinip and the rest had done before, which he veelded vnto, and very nobly lent vs his owne long Boate, for our better speede, willing vs there to water, whilest he with the rest of the Fleete, did ply vp and downe to looke out for the Adelantado, or any Indian Fleete, that being the very fit place, and leafon for them. Hereupon whileit our men and Mariners were prouiding to water, our Reare-admirall, with Sir William Brooke, my felfe, and divers other Gentlemen went alhoare, to stretch our legs in the Isle of Flores, and to refresh our selves with such victuals as we could there get for our monie. And at our first landing there, we met with the Lord Gray, Sir Gylly Merricke, and other Gentlemen, and wee altogether walked a mile or two into the Countrie, and there dined in a little Village, where the barelegged Governour caused such things to be brought voto vs. for our monie, as the Island afforded

In other fort we tooke nothing, which was very faire wars. This Island seemes to be somewhat mountainous, yet having very good store of Fruits. Wheat, and other Corne. Their Corne they doe all keepe in large hollow vaults within the earth, hauing no other way nor entrance into them, but by a round hole in the top of the vault, onely fo big 20 as a man may creepe into it, and when it is closed up with a planke, and overstrewed with earth. is very hard to be found out by strangers, for the which purpose they are so made, and much like. the Caues in Gafcorne, and Languedocke, and luch as are mentioned by Cafar to be vied in Affricke. This Island lies more subject to the inquision of Sea-faring men, then any of the refe; for there all traders of the Indies doe vitually water, and refresh themselves. But here I must not for- A Countillfor get to relate, that before we had our leave to water, or were departed from the Generall, a Countaining fell was called, and holden, for the taking in of fome of the Islands, and an orderly course fet Hands. downe for the same: which was in this fort concluded on: The Admirall and Reare-admirall to undertake Farall: the Lord Thomas Howard Vice-admirall, and the Marshall Vere, to undertake Gratiofa; The Lord Mounting, Lieutenant Generall, and Sir Christopher Blum Coronell Gene-30 rall of the Foote to Saint Michaels : and the Netherland Squadron, was quartered to Price, where the greatest store of Wines doe grow, and therefore would not be taken in ill part of them, as we prefumed. The reason why we resolved to master and waste all these flands was , because is was determined by the Generall to attempt the Tercera it felfe: which enterprise was put off, because the Rearc-admirall, and with him twenty or thirty saile were wanting. But being now live; but it was first thought necessary to take from them, and to helpe our selues, with all the victuals and other commodities that those Islands could affoord: For the performance of which with the more speede, we divided our selves into soure Companies, as before written: But surely the fortune of those poore wretches was lamentable, that fell into the Flemmings hands; for I thinke 40 no people on the earth, can we leffe mercy, or greater infolencies then they doe, in all the places that they Holenders and matter which are subject to the Spanish Government : and yet I must say truely for them, that the Spa- Spaniarden min niards againe baue veed fuch tyrannie, and outrage in their surificitions ouer that industrious people, as tie implacable hath well merited their irreconcileable malice, and withall bath coft the Spanish King many millions of Ducates, besides the life of many a prond Castilian, since the Execution of the Counts Egmount and Horne. And it is very admirable to fee what heart and courage those Netherlanders are now growne unto, and how powerfully three or foure lettle Prouinces, doe relift the forces of that mightie King, that keepes Millaine, Naple-, and Sicill in great bondage, in despight of all the Italians, who doe

(contrary to all expectation, and to many mens hopes) arrived, this resolution received a second

thinke themselnes for valour, and for policie the Minions of the Earth, and yet bow their neckes to the Spanish roake.

After this confultation for taking in of the Islands, as aforefaid, and leave given vnto vs, and our conforts to water with all the speede we could, at Flores, we having prepared our Caske, and all things in a readinesse to bring our fresh water aboord, about midnight, being the sixteenth of September, there came vnto vs from our Generall, Captaine Arthur Champernoune, with this meffage; That my Lord Generall was borne up for Fjall, and ment presently to take it in, and therefore willed vs with all speede to follow him instantly, and though wee could not ouertake him, yet at least to finde him there so soone as we could, and the same word was likewise deliuered to Sir William Brooke, and the reit, that lay there to water. And further, our Generall ient vs word, that we should supply all our wants of water, and fresh victuals at Fayall. And this night as we rode at ancor before Flores, we faw another Ramebow, by the Moone light, as before, and af-60 ter the famo manner, which (contrary to Plinies report of Aristotels opinion) was feene, though not at a the Moone, full Moone, for the other was so seene some seven dayes before, in the which pace, there could not be two full Moones. Vpon this Meffage brought by Captaine Champernowne we forbare watering, and hasted all we could, to weigh our anchors, and to follow our Generall. And therefore gaue a warning prece or two, to our Conforts before wee departed, and afterwards pack don all the failes we could make to follow our Generall, whom we could not ouertake, nor finde. The next morning we made Fayall, and entred the roade, and there miffed of him alfo. contrain to our hopes, and to our great discentent. Whereat we could not but greatly maruell, because when he sent for vs, he was fix leagues neerer it, then we were, and bendes, fet faile towards it fixe or eight houres before vs. Being arrived in the roade, wee beheld before our eyes a very fine Towne, pleasantly seared alongst the shoare side : from whence presently upon the fight of our entrance into the roade, they began to packe away with bag, and baggage all they could with carriages of Horles and Carts, Women, Children, Friers, and Nunnes, and so continued in transporting all vp into the Countrey for two dayes together. There was belides a ftrong Fort at one end of the Town, and another on the top of a very high Mountain, neere adioyning, by nature very vnaccessible, and steepe, and artificially fenced with Flanckers, Rampiers, and Ditch, and in it fix Peeces of great Artillerie, mounted vpon carriages, and two hundred Spaniards in garrison. befue others of the Island. These made cercaine shot at our Ships as they anchored in the roade. but did not much harme, and fet vp a great red Auncient for vs to gaze at : Befides, there were prefently fent fix Companies with their Colours, to intrench themselves vpon the shoare fide. to impeach our landing : Hereupon our Reare Admirall in his Barge , accompanied with my felfe onely and Captaine Morgan, rowed close abourd the high Fort, and all along it the sheare side, to wards the Towne, to fee what fit place there was to make a difcent against our Generals comming. From whence we were faluted with divers musker thor; that miffed vs but narrowly by good fortune, for we undifcreetly had with us neitheir Targets, nor Armors, but wished for them when it was to late. And therefore as well by that experience, as allo by others in the fame issurner. Vincined rathe that I (aw at our landing upon a fortified trench, I faw it to be but an idle and unferniceable brauers, for men that are to doe feruice, to expose their unarmed bodies and limbs, to the mercy of a Musket, or the pulb of a Pike : whereby they can neither with that abilitie, nor refolution, profecute that they have in hand, nor yet fo well preferme themselves at they ought to doe, for the bettering of their attempts. Besides, out of a Christian regard, they bould not deferately cast away themselves, or carelest hill their owne bloud, and the lines of many others, by such braning, and foolist examples. This night as we roade in the Harbour, there fromme abourd vs from the Towne two Portugals that disconcred unto us many things. greatly encouraging us to this exploit. And of this we may bouldly take knowledge, that the Portugals. and Inhabitants of those Islands doe infinitely hate, and malice the Spaniards, and their Government, and 30 mould no doubt) free themselves thereof sladinifiber were fure to fall under any other Concrement that were able to protett them from the Spaniards. And therefore if any powerfull Monarch or State did attempt it, they should not be troubled as with a Conquest, for all the Inhabitants would some be perswaded to renoli, and take part with the inuaders, for the advancing of that bufine fe.

While we thus expected our Generall in vaine (to our no little maruell) that thought he had bin there before vs, according to Captaine Champernownes report (the winde being as good then for him as for vs) our Reare Admirall called a counfell of many Captaines, and Officers (that were come thither by order) to confult of the taking of the Towne, if our Generall came not, thinking it a great shame and pittie to let slip to faire a pray, so neere at hand, without attempting it in time, before they had carried all away. Befides a great scorne and difgrace wee should 40 doe our felues, to enterprise nothing vpon them that had begun the warres, shooting first at vs as we roade at ancor, and then after their bringing downe to the water fide fo many Auncients, did proudly as it were inuite vs to affaile them, if we durft, having withall, hung out a red Flagge of defiance, from the top of the high Fort. The hope of the wealth of this good Towne, and the ransoming of Houses and Prisoners, together with those brauadoes which they shewed, did so fee on fire all our Mariners and Souldiers, as that they began to mutine, and raile on the Reare Admirall, and at all the Commanders there, taxing them for these delaies, as not daring to attempt the taking thereof: Betides, they were the more eagerly fet upon the spoile, and gaining of this Towne, and Fort, for that they faw no great likelihood of benefit by this Voyage, but what was gotten ashoare in the Islands. In conclusion, albeit we heard no newes of our Generall in two 50 dayes more expectation, yet at the counfell of Captaines which our Reare Admirall had affembled, some of them varied much from the common defire, and would by no meanes affent to the landing, without my Lord Generall his knowledge. And of this opinion was Sir Guilly Mericke, Sir Nicholas Parker, and some other Captaines : Our Reare Admirall, with Sir William Brooke, my selie, Sir William Harney, and other Gentlemen, and Commanders of our Reare Admirall his Squadron (called to this confultation) were of a contrary opinion, judging that my Lord Generall would repute vs but Idlers, and Cowards, to lye fo long, before fo good a Towne, with fo many Ships and men, and to doe nothing in his absence, seeing them hoursly before our eyes, so fait to carry, and packeaway their goods and wealth. And this was allow ne common opinion and bruite, as well of the multitude, as of the Low Countrie Captaines. But vet the violent and earneit 60 periwations of Sir Guille Merricke, did to prevaile with vs, vrging our obedience and duetie to our Generall, as that we staied from the Enterprise at that time, and expected our Generals comming one day longer, especially for that they perswaded vs, it his Lordhip came not the next day, then themselves would also land with vs.

CHAP.14. S.2. Sir G. Meriks indisposition. Spanish Brauado. English landing. 1953

Which when we had also expected in vain, and the winde changing somewhat vnfit for that Roade, our Reare Admirall, and disers of his Squadron, and many other of the Ships tollowing him, wered, and coasted about the point, to the North-west side of the Island , some soure miles forther from the Towne then we were before, and there let fall our ancors, being then a better Roade then the first, as the winde was changed. But Sir Guille Merricke with tome five or fixe Ships of his contorts, staied still in the first Roade, and would not budge. When we had in this fort changed our Roade, and being now the fourth day of our arrivall before Farall (which was not aboue a daies failing from the place, from whence our Cenerall tent for vs, wee might fee before vi, a very fine and pleafant Countrie, full of little Villages, and fruitfull fields : and therefore we in much defired to refresh our selves aland there with victuals, and water, as our Generall had promifed we should doe, when we came to Farall, and as divers others had done before vs at Flores, and as we had then, but that we were called away to Fajall by Captaine Champernownes fodaine muffage from the Generall, as was aforefaid. And in truth we were in great want of fresh water, which we had not renued, tince our fetting out from Plimonth. All thele occasions confidered, and webeing now retired from the Towne and Forts, we all refolued that wee might without offence, with a few of our owne men, goe alhoare, and refresh our felues, and feeke for water : whereupon we manned a Barge, a long Boate, and a Pinnace with threefcore Muskets, and forty Pikes, rather to guard our felues in our landing, and watering with difcretion, then expecting any encounter or resistance, from the Towne or Forts, on the other side of the Island. But our an men were no sooner placed in our Boates, and all things ordered, and we ready to put off from the Ships fide, but we might discouer fixe Auncients of foote, and some doten Horsemen comming on a speedy march from the Towne and Forts, directly towards the place where wee were to make our discent ; for from one side of the high Fort on the Mountaine, they might also ouerlooke vs, where our ships roade, and discouer all our preparation.

When we had a while adused of this new Brauado, that they went about, and saw them fill to come on faster, with so many strong companies of men (or at the least the bodies of men furnihed with womens hearts) and had made luch hafte, as that they possessed themselves of the Trenches and Flankers, where we were to land, and there had placed their Companies, and Collors, attending our approach, as they made flew, by waving their Swords, and displaying their 30 Auncients ingreat brauery (for doubtleffe they thought we feard to land in their faces, because we lay folong before the Town, and neuer attempted any thing, and were fo shrunke aside off; after they had prouoked vs fo with great flot, and many other affronts) we feeing that proportion of an hundred men (prouided onely to guard our watering) to be too few to affault, and win a landing upon so many, in a place of so great disaduantage, and yet distaining to goe backe, or make any thew of feare; our Reare Admirall in his Barge rowed to Sir William Brookes Ship, and to Sir William Harueyes, and desired them, and some other Sea Captaines, to accompany him in landing, with luch men as conveniently they could furnish : For (laid he) seeing these Spaniards and Partugals are so gallant to seeke and follow vs, and to keepe vs from watering, wee will try our fortunes with them, and either win our landing, or gaine a beating.

Sir William Brooke, Sir William Harney, and some others, very willingly affented, and prefently there were made ready with shot, and Pike one hundred and fixtie men more in Boates. And after this our Reare Admirall rowing by Captaine Bret, Sidney, White, Berry, and other Captaines of the Low Countrie Souldiers, that were there abroad in other Ships, they all cried out to take them and their companies with them, affuring him, that if he adventured to land with Mariners, and with his owne attendants, without iome Companies of Land Souldiers, hee would receive a difgrace. He answered, that he durit not take any of my Lord Generall his company of the Low Compries, no knowing in what feruice he ment to vie them; but he was resolved with the Gentlemen, and company of his owne Squadron, first to make a discent, and then to call them, and fend Boates for them, if he proceeded any further, and that neither my Lord Generall, nor any 50 of his traine, should have cause to be ashamed of vs, for undertaking that in the face of our Enemies, which we durst not follow, and performe. And therefore told those Captaines, that hee would first attempt to win a landing, and then after if they could but second him ashoare with two hundred men more, hee would vndertake to lodge them that night in the Towne, and the next night after in the Forrs. These Captaines were all glad of the newes, and promised to come after vs, if we would lend our Boates for them; for most of their Ships had lost their Boates with foule weather.

This order and direction being given, we hasted as fast as our Oares could ply without the company of any Low Countrie Souldiers (being as I faid two hundred and fixty ftrong, and the enemy more than the double as many) to the landing place which was first guarded with a migh- Hard place to 60 ty ledge of Rockes, some forty paces long into the Sea, and afterwards trenched, and flanked land in. with earth and stone, and onely a narrow lane betweene two wals left for our Entrance. But withall, we caused some of our Pinnaces that carried Ordnance, to lye as close to the shoare as they could, to flinke and beate vpon them in their trenches a little before, and inft as wee made. But if there had bin but one hundre Low Countrie Spaniards at that defence, it had coft many of our lines, & yet perhaps have mil. fed our purpole too: For a small company with any resolution, might have made good that place: against a farre greater force then ours were at that time. But as we made onwards with our Boate. the shot plaied so thicke upon vs, as that in truth the Mariners would scarce come forwards, hauing the leffer liking to the bufinelle, the neerer they came to it. And in like fort did I fee fome there theger, and stand blanke, that before made great shewes, and would gladly be taken for yaliant Leaders : and some of these, our Reare Admirall did not spare to call vpon openly, and rebuke aloud with diffracefull words, feeing their bafeneffe.

buke aloud with digitaction revolutions, and with all finding a generall amazement among it the Mariners, and as it were a flay among it is all the Boates, well p ceiuing that this manner of houering, was both more difgracefull, and also to more vulate, lying so open to the enemies shot (which through feare and amazement the Ma-Sir W. E. hisre- riners, and Rowers, neither observed nor vnderstood) with a loud voice commanded his Watermen to rowe in full upon the Rockes, and bad as many as were not afraid, to follow him: Heremon fome Boates ran in with vs, and out of them there landed Master Garret a Pentioner, now Earle of Kildare, a Noble and valiant Gentleman; Sit William Brooke, Sit William Harner, Sit lohn Scot. Mafter Duke Brooke, Captaine Henry Thinne, Captaine White, Mafter Thomas Rugewar, Mafler Walter Chute, Captaine Arthur Radford, Master Henry Allen, Captaine William Moroan Matter Charles Mackart, and divers other Gentlemen, whole names I would not omit, if I could call them all to minde, And so clambring over the rockes, and wading through the water, we passed pell mell, with Swords, Shot, and Pikes vpon the narrow Entrance. Whereupon those that were at the defence, after some little relitance, began to fhrinke, and then feeing vs to come failer on vpon them, suddenly retiring, cast away their weapons, turned their backes, and fled. and the like did the rest in the higher Trenches, and quickly recoursed the hils, and the woods, being a people very swift, and nimble of foote; for we could take none of them, but such as after yeelded vato vs. And as for their Auncients, we could not recouer one, for the Horfemen that they had, carried them cleane away. And in this fort we gained both our landing, and our Enemies Trenches. In which attempt some few men were drowned, and slaine, divers hurt, and two long Boates bulged, and loit. And after that we faw all things cleare, we affenibled our Troopes together, and refreshed ourselves, with such comfort, as we had there, which done, we sent backe 30 our Boates for those Low Countrie Captaines afterward; who vpon their arrivall congratulated our good fuccesse, in taking to strong a peece of ground, fortified, and guarded with so many men, When these Captaines were come vinto vs, we then tooke our felues to be a prettie Armie, being then in strength to the number of foure hundred and fixtie well armed, and appointed : whereof there were of Captaines and Gentlemen of good fort thirty, or forty which gaue great life to

And having done so much already, we then thought it the best way to goe through with the matter, and to prepare the Towne in a readinesse for our Generall, and to make our selues Burgeifes thereof in the meane feason, and therefore our Reare Admirall appointed Captaine Bret to vie the Office of Sergeant Major, and gaue direction to the other Captaines to advance their ad Colours, and to call their Companies together, in a readinesse, and so putting our Troopes in order, we marched directly toward the Towne, where by the way, divers of thele lame very Spaniards. and Portugals, that a little before so braued vs, came and rendred themselves in great humility, with white Napkins on the end of stickes, all whom, wee received, and well intreated, vling some for Guides, and some for our Carriages, and others to fetch vs in fresh Victuals, and Fruites. And it is worth the noting , to jee the farre differing humors, upon the change of Forunces, in these Spaniards, and Portugals. For where they conquer or command, no people are so proud, and in-Portugall ichol folent, and when they are once mastered, and subdued, no Nation of the world to bate, or fuller of service lers of Fortun crouching, and observance, as though on a sodaine Nature had framed them in a new mould, so soone in an instant will they fall from (overaigntie to flavery. And furely (at home) they are in generall but a 50 baggage people, timorous, and very unwarlike. As we have well experienced by severall invasions, whereof one Arms was conducted by Sir Iohn Norris, and Sir Francis Drake to Lisbona, and the other by the Earle of Ellex, and the Lord Admirall Howard to Cadis, without any refistance, encounter in the field, or show of affayling our forces by battaile, all the while we stated there. But afterwards with a little bardening, and hartening in the Warres, wee fee them prone very brane, and valiant Souldiers. This Towne was some soure miles from this landing place, and all the Country in which wee marched very champion, with pretty little rifing hils, and all the fields over full of Mellons, Potatoes, and other Fruites. Betweene vs, and the Towne, was this high Fort, whereof I spake before, and that other Fort at the end of the Towne : By thefe two we were rejolued to palle, the 60 better thereby to discouer and obserue their strength, and situation; although there was another way that led to the Towne, fome two miles further about, which we tooke not. But our retolution was the next morning to goe in hand with thefe Forts, which now we could not performe, the day being too far spent, and our men already ouerwearied with the last worke, togeCHAP. 14 S.2. ther with a long march, and extreame hot weather, belides want of victuals. And therefore for that might we ment onely, either by faire or foule meanes to possesse our selucs of the Towne, and there to lodge, and fo to content our felues, as having performed already, a fufficient daies worke. But in our march, as we approached neere the high Fort (by which of necessitie we were now to paffe) they did very fiercely beate on vs both with great and fmall thot, hurting divers, and killing tome of our people. Amongst others I faw a very strange accident happen to Captaine William Morgan, by whom my felfe at that time flood, when from the Fort he received upon a round buckle or his girdle, iust in the forepart, a Musket shot, that brused all his belly blacke, in a round Strange acciipot, and battered the Bullet flat at his feete, but did him no other hurt. Hee was in his doublet dent of a flow and hofe without any Armour, or Target, for the which a little before I found fault with him, and his answere to me was, that his fieth was of the Musket proofe, as indeede it after proued, with the helpe of a buckle of a Spanish girdle, and good fortune besides, which in the common opinion fauoureth the valiant.

In this approaching towards the Fort. our Reare Admiral accompanied with divers other Gentlemen of the best fort, to the number of forty, in the head of all the Troopes, with his leading staffe, and no other Armour then his Collar(a brauery in a chiefe Commander not to be commen- Reare Admira) ded) led on the Company with fost march, full in the face of the Fort, descending downe a little taxed, hill, whileft with their great Ordnance, and Musketteir, we were very shrewdly pelted. But he, with this little Vauntguard was no fooner part, and entred under the couert of their trenches, and barricadoes, that were at the foote of this steepe hill, but the maine body of our little Armie, that a while marched in good order, began prefently to breake their rankes, and from marching fell to flat running in ftragling manner to foone as ever they began to finde themselves within the mercy of the Musket shot and so continued in this disorderly, and timorous course, vntill they were upon our heeles, under the wals, and trenches, almost as soone as we, that were in manner of a Vauniguard come fome twelue fcore before them in a fleady flow march. Our Reare Admirall. and we all cried out on them for this hamefull diforder, and taxed Captains Bret, and Captains Berry, with other of the Captaines for it, and of them demanded, if these were the men, that Should have done os such stead in our landing, to same vis from dishonour, or if this be the manner of their old Low Country Troopes, to hew such base cowardise, at the first sight of the Enemie, and for Musket hot so farre off from a Fort. The fault was not (urely in these Captaines, for they were well knowne, and showed themselves to be bonest and resolute men, and did their best to stay this disorder. But their answere was this that these comtanies, that did to beastlike behave them felnes, were in deede men taken out of Flushing, and Brill, the Cautionary Towns, and raw Souldiers, that ever lived in a fafe Garrison, & feldome or never bad feene enemie, or incountered with that in the field. And therefore for thefe kinde of Low Countrie Souldiers, they faid, we should never finde them, but as base and backward fellowes, as the other Regiments that bad fol-Jaid, we poon a never joint voice to any and valiant. And as it seemed to vo then, and as since I have heard divers Difference confirme, their answere was true, and grounded upon reason and Experience. And therefore it is not a- twist Campe mille to take good notice of such as onely serme to take pay, to malke rounds, and guard ports in Garrison and Garrison Towner for in the field they will most commonly be missing or at least (if present) doe little hart for con. Souldiers,

We being thus come vnto the foote of the high Fort, and vnder covert of the Trenches, and wals which they had abandoned, retiring themselves into their fortifications, and firengths on the top of the Hill: our Reare Admirall commanded Captaine Bret to appoint a Sergeant or two, with tome few that, to see proue and discouer the way towards the Towne, and take safe in hand with them one of our Partuall guides, for the more affurance, and for the better instructions for conducting the Troopes, because he was informed by the Guides, that the way in divers places lay very open, and dangerous to the shot of the high Fort, as well as to the Fort at the Townes end. And the worfe, by reason of low wals made of loose stones, on either side of the waves. which the great Artillery, and Musketeir would beate vpon, and featter among ft vs. and fo indeede afterwardsin the march we found it true. Captaine Bret answered, that although it had 50 pleased our Reare Admirall to appoint him to another Office, yet, if he would expressly command him, he would also furuer this passage himselfe. But it was not thought fit at that time to want the Sergeant Major amongst such raw, and disorderly troopes; and therefore he was againe willed to appoint a Lieutenant, and a Sergeant or two, to got about that businesse, in manner as was aforefaid. But woon this order to given, Captaine Bret made report, that hee found the Sergeants and Lieutenants very vnwilling to vndertake this discouery, making the passage very dishcult, by reason that they saw them from the hill top, to beate so dangerously with their great Artillery .vpon vs, and the loofe wals, & also to ply vs to fast with their Musketeir, the which they might better doe on that way. And therefore the Troopes were very defirous, to have passed by with 60 fome speede, and not in any orderly march, and strength, which indeede had bin a very foule, and alio an hazardous courfe. For as we were credibly informed, the Island was able to make a thoufand men furnified with weapons, and wee were perswaded (or at least to suspect) that they would gather the body of their most strength, for the defense of their best Towne, towards the which we were now marching.

Reare Admirais valour.

Out Reare Admirall feeing all men to make fuch scrupulositie of this businesse, when Cantaine Bret had related vnto him the backwardnesse of thele Low Countrie Garrison Souldiers, thereung answered that he would not offer that to any, which he would himselfe refuse to vndertake, if neede required; although it were not the dutie and office of the chiefe Commander, to ynders of fo ordinary a fernice, but a thing duely appertaining to the inferior Officers, & Souldiers : Norwithflanding (faid he) though I could inforce others to doe it, they shall well perceine, that I my selfe will doe that which they dare not performe: whereof I am ashamed in their behalfe, and how our Generall and we all are abused, in the opinion of these Low Countrie Souldiers, And therefore called for his Curates and Caske, and faid, that he would both goe view the way for them, which they had made so nice of, and also the passages, and ascents voto the hill top, and as well as hee 10 could take view of the ilrength, and fortifications thereof, for our better directions against the next morning that we should attempt it. Captaine Berrie thereupon very willingly offered himfelfe to hoe and did earneftly defire me to divert our Reare Admirall from undertaking it. And I thereupon did openly diffawde him that commanded in chiefe, from putting his owne person to those inferiour Offices of hazard, fitter for a Lieutenantor a Sergeant, then himselfe to performe. knowing that all the direction, as well of those troopes, as alloof a whole Squadron of the Nanie did at that time onely rest you him, in the absence of the Admirall, & Vice Admirall, Notwithflanding he was oblinate therein, as well in scorne to them that had refused, as also indeede our of a deire to be the better informed of the strength, and fortification of the high Fort. Wherein when I law him refolued, I told him that I would out of the love of a kinfman, in particular, 20 and also out of an honest regard, take such part as he did, from whom I had received many kinde favours, and accompany him, but not out of any great defire I had to goe about a peece of worke. that confilled of much danger, and little honour in the performance. Hee thanked mee for mine offer, but yet wished me not to goe, if it were against my minde; notwithstanding I accompanied him, and fo did some eight or ten more of our feruants and followers. But I say truely, and to afterwards it was much fooken of, that there was not any one more of quality that did accompany him in that bufineffe. In this fort, and in this number did he himlelfe goe to discover the passage, and also was care-

we were shrewdly troubled with the great Artillery, which did beat upon the old wals, alongst the which we were to passe, and therewithall much indangered and harmed vs. For besides some that were hurt, two of our traine had their heads firicken cleane from their shoulders; my felfe was then shot through the left leg with a Musket bullet, but miffed the boanes being but a fleshwound but the bullet did burne both my filke flocking and buskin, as if it had bin finged with an hot Iron. I was then hard by the Reare Admirall, who also was shot through the breeches & doublet fleeues in two or three places. And still they plied ve to fast with small shot, as that (I well remember) he wished me to put of a large red scarre, which I then wore, being (as hee faid) a very faire marke for them. But I was not willing to do the Spanuards fo much honor at that time albeit full and diligent to observe and search out the strengths and ascents to the hill. In which doing, Scarfe-brauery perillous.

I could have wished it had not bin on me, &therfore told the Reare Admirall again, that his white fearfe was as eminent as my red, and therefore I now would follow his example. But yet in my poore 40 opinion I fee no great honor nor discretion in those nice ceremonies, but when men go to fernice, they may with reputation either put on, or put off all habiliments, for their most advantage and securitie, and especially in going to discomer, which best may be performed, when them selves are least disconered And this puts me in minde of a report which I heard many yeeres since of Monsieur La: Noc that famous French Captain, and one Buffey de Amboys, a gallant French Gentleman. Thefe two being with Monfieur the French Kings brother, some 24. yeer: since at the stege of Bines in the Low Countries, were to informe themselves of a flanker, or some Ranelin that was to be beaten with Artillery. La Noue was the Marshall of Monsieurs Campe, and Buffye his great fanourite, & Lieutenant Generall (as I take it) Buffey would needes before Monfieur in a branery, muite La Noue to undertake with bim the disconery of that place, which La None out of his better indement, and experience in the Warres, thought not so sit a prece of service for 50 their places, but rather to be preserved to some private Captaines of valour, and indeement, that would very conerily goe about it. But such was Buffeyes forward beate, and iolitie to the businesse, as that La Noue, who was inferiour to none in true valour, disclained to refuse that, which the other still orged, and made so light of. And being stirred by Busseyes daring branery, he fell to the businesse, and led Bussey such a dance in his hose and doubled unarmed to the discourty, and so slilly carried him on fill with a fober discourse, further and further into the very mouth of the Cannon and Musket Shot, with a foft steady pace, as that Bussey began to finde and dislike their entertainment, feeing the imminent danger that they fill ranne into. And thereupon suddenly asked La Noue, what he meant so farre openly to ingage himselfe, and on so slow a pace: whereto La Noue answered, that bee ded fo, to make Buffey know, that La Noue had a beart as well to execute, as a tongue to give coun- 60 fell when neede required. But at last, they both falling into the true rechaning of their fellies; the one, for verging a valiant old Souldier, and the other for affenting to the vaine elevious humour of jouthly enconsiderate courage, came off very quietly both together, baning had their fils of disconcring. And get thefe Simullates (as the Latines name them) have ever in all ages raigned. Cafar in his Commentaries makes an effeciall observation of two of his Captaines for the like: The one was called Titus Pulho, and the other Lucius Varenus, and it happened in his Warres of France, in the wintering Campe of Quintus Cicero, one of his Lieutenant; being furiously affaulted by the Gauls, but most resolutely defended. The manner bee describes bexcellently, and large, in bis Commencaries, to which ! referre von.

And now to our purpose, by this time, we had reasonably to our satisfaction, made a sufficient discouery, both of the way for our Troopes to paste, and also of the ascents to the high Forton the Mountaine. And then there came vnto vs Captaine Berry, and one Maiter Henry Allen, and others; who finding me hurt, very kindely bemoned my harme, and I in requitall of their curtefie, so as much lamented the want of all their good companies at that banquet; vpon the comming of thefe vato vs, we fent backe two of our men to Captain Bret (Sergeant Major for that time) to be his Guides, and to will him prefently to march on with his Troopes towards the Towne after vs. and that we would stay for them, because we then looked to be fought withall, or at the least, to have some little fally, or bickering out of the Fort at the Towns end, which we must needes passe by before we could come to the Town. This was a very fine fortification all of stone worke, with by, before we could control to the 200 main and the curtaine, flankers, and ditch, very artificially cast: but prefently vpon our approach they abandoned it, and in our passing by we entred into it, and found that they had newly for faken the place. for faken, The like did they afterwards from the Towne, and were all fled up into the Countrie, and into Towne abane the Mountaines, fauing those two hundred that were garrifoned in the high Fort. The Towne doned. 20 was emptied, and left very bare of all things, but of fuch wares as could not fuddenly be remou-

ed : which was Wine, Salt, and Corne, whereof they left a little flore for our refreshing. The rest of our Troopes by this time were now come on very neere to the Towne, but there were some fine and twentie of them fhot, and fome feuen or eight flaine in the paffage.

And in this manner we did afterwards enter the Town very peaceably; which was a pleafant place, built all of Stone, and couered with Tile; and full of fine Gardens, Orchards, and Welsof Towne. delicate waters, with faire Streets, and one very faire Church, and also a Nunnery, and a Fryerie. This Island is of late yeeres become very watchfull, and the people more growne to the vie of fit armes, and have for their defence erected this new fortification, on the high hill, with a Garrison

For not long before, it had bin very gallently furprifed, and (as I thinke) lacked, and ransomed, by the right Honorable George Clifferld Earle of Comberland (a no- Earle of Cumble Gentleman) that had often exposed both his purse, and his person, to his great honour and ex- beiland. See perience in those Seafaring Aduentures. And presently vpon our entrance we made Barricadoes. fop, L6 s.1. placed good Guards in divers parts, and a strong Corps de Guard in the Market place. For the town being vawalled, we were to suspect, that if we lay there open, and carelessy refreshing our selves. and our fouldiers scattered abroad in seeking for victuals, we might easily be surprised without good order, and directions given, before we fell to our repast, or reit. But this order being first performed, then were others at better liberty to fearch tafely for bootie. that not without the knowledge and leave of an Officer, and then to goe vpon their guard with fit weapon, and company. Hauing now refreshed and reposed our selues all night without any trouble, more then two false alarmes, that were given vpon the fight of divers of the inhabitants that approached towards the Towne, to view the manner of our dealings with their buildings (which proued nothing, but miftruft of the worst) for which, all things were well prouided to The Generals withitand the enemy) the next morning being the 22.of September, even with the day breake, comming. we might see our Generall with his Fleete at hand, bearing in with all sailes towards the Roade of Fayall, who all this while had bin beating up and down the Seas, looking about for the Adelantade, and other Aduentures. And that this is true, those that understand his humour hest, cannot instit deny. The which (I protest) I doe not speake, either out of any neglect of one that is dead, or to picke a thanke of any that lines, but fimply out of a refolution to write an unpartial truth, or elfe to be filent. For wee feethat those Heathens, which have written the stories of Cyrus Pyrrhus, Alexander, Haniball, Scipio, Ciefar, and of all other those great Kings, or renouned Heroes, do as well taxe them for their vices, as glorific them for their vertues: For who lines without fault? And to conclude, this impotent humor of induring rinality, and other mens praises, is versincident to men in high places, especially if they be of great courage, or sickled with Ambitton. It was be ides all adged, that the prefumption and fcorne, to land fuch Forces without his Lordibios leave, was not to be paffed over without feuere punishment, and a Marshall Court fic to be called, to cenfure the offence and breach of order, and discipline, with many other as bitter arouments, and deuiles, as their wits could compalle, to aggravate the Generals wrath against all that were in this Action, and especially the Reare Admirall. Against whom, they spared not so farre to inueigh, as that they gave it out, that he was well worrhy to loofe his head for his labour. 10 And so had they inneighed the Generall against weall, as that all the forenoone was spent in reprehending and displacing all the Land Captaines, and Officers that accompanied the Reate Admirall in that Action, who being fent for to answere before the Generall aboord his ship, was before the Messenger came for him, gone in his Barge to fee the Generall, and to guide him to the Land, not to much as suspecting that any thing had binill taken for that matter, but rather Sir Walter Ralooking for great thankes at the Generall his hands. But so some as he entred the Generals ship. Lish commeth he found all mens countenances ettranged, as he passed through them. And when he was entred into the Generals cabbin, after a faint welcome, the Generall began to challenge him of breach of order and Articles : To whom the Reare Admirall answered, that he knew not of any such breach: my Lord replied, that there was an article that none should land any of the Troopes 20 without the General's presence, or his order. The Reare Admirall defired the Generall to give him leque to defend himfelfe by those Lawes, which himfelfe as well as others had denifed, and his Lordinip with the Cou fell of warre had authorited, and that then his Lordinip should finde that he had not committed any Errour at all. For (faith he) there is an Article, that no Captaine of any (hip, nor Captaine of any Company, if be be senered from the Fleete, shall land any where without direction on from the Generall or some other principall Commander, upon paine of death, oc. But I take my selfe (faid be) to be a principall Commander, under your Lordibio, and therefore not subject to that Article, nor under the power of the law Marshall because a successione commander of the whole Fleets in her Maiesties Letters Patents, your Lordship, and my Lord Thomas Howard failing. And besides your Lord-This agreed that I (bould land at this I fland, with your Lardship, whom I have attended these fouredayes, 30 andfinding that your Lordbip came not, being in your way thisberwards halfe a dozen leagues before, I maied anchor, I could not but thinke, that you thought meftrong inough to take this Ifland, and that your Lording was gone, with some of the rest to some of the other I flands. And Stated to long from landing at Sir Guillie Merrickes intreatie, as I heard mine owne company, euen at my backe, murmur, and fay, that I durst not adventure it. And to tell your Lording a plaine truth, my intent at first was onely to water, untill I fam them follow me in that braning manner, which with our reputations were could not then fluin, and eine oner being already in our Boates for that purpole. For if I had intended the taking of the Towne, I would never have retired fo farre off from our first Roade, that lay right before it. This difpute held some halte houre, and then the Generall went asware, and rested himselfe in the Reare Admirals lodging, being well enough fatisfied at that time. In fo much as the Reare 40 Admirall defired my Lord to tup there, and that if his Lordship ment to call the matter further in queltion, he would claime no primledge nor fauour thereby, but answer it in the morning. To which Sir Christopher Bluns (taking my Lords and were from him) faid, that he thought my Lord would not fup at all. But the Reare Admirall finding Sir Christopher Blunts disposition, told him, that when he muited him he might disable his owne appetite, but if my Lord pleased to stay, he would be very glad of his prefence. In this meane while my Lord Thomas Howard very nobly, and kindely taking care, that no wrong, nor difgrace might be offered to the Reare Admirall by Conflian and any deutse, or practife of his Enemies, dealt with the Generall to finde how hee stood refolued, friendly medi- and the next morning affored the Reare Admiral, that my Lord fought nothing but a due acknowledgement of an offence, alleadging that the rest would thinke him a very weake and tame Com-50 mander, if he should receive no manner of satisfaction. The Reare Admirall hoping that hee had done nothing vniustriable, and well affured, that he was successively in the Commission, for the whole commandement of the Fleete (and therefore not subject to-any corporall danger) as also because he affured himselse of the Vice Admirall his honorable love, and fincere dealing, came agame in the morning to visite the Generall. Otherwise (remembring the little trust that men ought to repose in reconciled enemies, and the strong malice borne him by others in greatest fauour with my Lord) had ment to have put himfelfe into his owne Squadron, and to to have defended himseife, or left my Lord. But my Lord Thomas Howard, perlwading him to goe, and fatisfie the Generall (vpon whose word onely he made that adventure, after he had given him his honour, with great kindnesse, and resolution, that he would make himselfe a party, if any wrong 60 The Generall or violence were offered, contrary to the General's promife unto him; he did as the Vice Admirall aduited him. And fo all things after a little dispute came to a quiet end and conclution.

And within a day or two after, the Generall accompanied with the Vice Admirall, and other Lords, and Commanders direct aboord our ship, where he was exceedingly intertained, and consented. Onely this I omitted that when the Generali committed Captaine Bret, Berry, and Sidner, The Reare Admirall defited that those Gentlemen might receiue no hard mealure in his caule. for whatlocuer his Lordinip doth conceine to have bin mildone, hee must take it wholly on himfelle to answere, being atthat time the Chiefe and Commander. This I have set downe in manner as I heard it, then from men of good fort, not being prefent thereat my felfe, nor at that time able to waite on the Generall, by reason of the shot through my legge, which I had received but the day before, in this thankleffe feruice.

CHAP.14.S.2. Cage left, Birds flowne. Enuy bad to all, to it selfe work of all.

Thus was the whole day frent in reprehending and disciplining vs for our paines. And yet mowithstanding, thele aggravators, and chiefe Initigators of our Generall, vouchlafed to take the benefit of our reproued Trauailes, in lodging, and retreihing themselves in this good Towne, both this night, and three or foure dayes after. But in the fame day that our Generall animed . about one of the clocke after midnight, all the Porsugals, and Spaniards in the high Fort, with their High Fort a. bagge and baggage, abandoned the place, leaving behinde them fix peeces of great Artillery bandoned. mounted. For when they law the whole Fleete together, and to many gallant Troopes land with Our Generall, their hearts fainted, and fo they fled into the Countrie, and woodly Mountaines adjoining. Then in the morning when it was too late (although as yet wee knew not fo much) direction was given to certaine troopes, and companies, to guard all the foot of the high Fort, to flop, and flay them from flealing from thence, that were already gone, for it was given out, that if they did not prefently furrender it, the place should be affailed. But when newes was brought that they had abandoned the Fort, and carried all away, then was there much descenting of the foule overlight, fo to suffer the Birds to escape out of the Cage, that might have bin to furely kept, if we had not bestowed more labour in disciplining and correcting our owne pretended faults for landing, then discretion or diligence in profecuting Enuiespieth and correcting our ownerpretended rautes for landing, then different or oringence in proceeding more in pre-the Enemy, whom we had at an advantage. For preferrly vpon their arrivall, they did nothing tradecition in but examine and discipline our offence. Whereas if they had gone in hand with the Fort, and protested enrcaft a carefull eye thereunto, we had not lost the ransoming of to many Spanish prisoners, nor the mies, and is afbenefit of the spoyle which they had carried out of the Towne, for lafty to that place. And at way worft to it this groffe errour there was much muttering. But now divers of the land officers (to colour and felfe, though excute their owne default) laid this blame also on vs, alleadging that we should have left a good 30 guard voon the Fort, if we had done like men of warre, voon our first landing, and then all had bin fure. And although this excuse passed at first for some paiment, for the common and more igporant fort, yet all men of judgement could eafily perceive, how impossible a matter it was for vs out of foure hundred and fixtie to spare so many, as should sufficiently guard two hundred souldiers, from fallying out of such a Fort, and yet proceede with the recouering of the other Fort. and Towne that was before vs. For the defence of both which, the Island was able and had in rea-fessed the Towne. But after the Generall was come, this might easily have bin performed. or if he had not come, they had not fled fo fuddainly, and the fame morning, wee our felues had atto tempted the Fort, and made no doubt to carry it. But then with the presence of our Generall. woon his arrivall, all our determinations, and authorities were concluded. Afterwards when our men entred this Fort, which the Spaniards had abandoned, there they found divers peeces of Artillery, and an English Gentleman whole name was Hart, and a Flori-

whom we were to have a vigilant eye, and to keepe a convenient strength after we had once pof-ming with both their throates cur. Then were there certaine companies fent abroad the Coun- Edit and andtry, to trace those Spaniards and Portugals, and to make waste of all that lay in their way. But ther left with of the Garrison they could never recover one man. Now after three or fourc dayes the anger and throates cuts diflikes of our Generall towards vs, were well preified, and vpon further confideration and conference with the Reare Admirall of his doings, hee grew againe into very kinde tearmes with him, and at his fuite released and restored all the difgraced Captaines that linded, and were in this feruice, and so having taken all the benefit, and refreshing of this Towne, and Island that we so could come by, our time being to thort, on the foureteenth of September we were all commanded to goe aboord. And so for a tarewell, and for the funerals of our lost men, and those two that were fo diffoitefully murthered in the high Fort, the Towne was brauely fet on hire, and all the Towne fired, Ordnance of the Towne, and Forts brought away with vs. And I am perfiveded that if the warres had not bin by chance to begun before by vs, vpon that Island by their owne feeking, and foolish brauery, and afterwards aggravated by their cruelty in murthering so despitefully two of our company in the high Fort, Fayall had elcaped as footfree as did Cuerno, Flores, Gratiofa, Saint Reward of cru-Michaels, or any of the other. For furely they were all at our metcy, the Fort of Tercera onely ely iscruely. excepted. But in all thele Actions I observed, and well faw, that our Generall in his true difposolition, affected rather to be renowned for bounty, clemency, and valour, then for the glory of a dreadfull Conquerour. All this while the Flemmings were playing their parts in the Ille of Pike. which was about a league from Fayall; where I leave them ranfacking the Wines, and burning all that was within their power.

presently whilest we roade before it, there came aboord our Generall, the chiefe men of the Ifland fubmitting themselves, and craving mercy of our Generall, alleadging (as they of Flores had done) that the inhabitants thereof were Portugals, and friends, and natural Enemies to the Spaniards, though they wanted meanes and force to show it, being held under them by frome hand. To this Island our Generall shewed his accustomed mercy, and required of them some protutions of Wine, Fruites, and fresh victuals for the relieuing of the Fleete; but of any other compolition we heard not, although it was supposed they did, or might have yeelded a better rantome : but this was very willingly fent by the inhabitants vnto vs. Here fome of the Commandets went abourd the Generall, and befought him to goe aland, and fomewhat better to furney, this Illand, and for one day to let his Fleete ancor in that Roade, which his Lordship shewed Lo great willing nelle vnto. But the Maiter of the Generals Ship, whose name was Grosela dell and voluckie fellow) was veterly against that counsell, and alleadged that the yeere was farre spent, and the place of anchoring there not good for the ground tackle, protesting that it would be danperous to, the whole Fleete, and put it in hazard, and therefore very earnestly perswaded and veged the leaving of that Roade; which admie of his, our Generall then followed, to our great leffe, and hinderance, as afterwards it fell out. But Groue the Mafter must pardon mee to fav in mine opinion, that it was an undifcreete aduife, to to divert our Fleete in fuch hafte from that Island, considering the long aboade he made afterwards before Saint Michaels, and at Villa Franca, to leffe purpose in as ill Roades as this, and later in the yeere. Hereupon wee waved, leaving Gratiosa voon Saint Michaels Eue, and made for Saint Michaels Island, and on Saint Michaels 20 day, early in the morning, we made that land, and bare in with the finoare. And as wee came ye-the Roade of Gratiofa, that the Generall had so vnwillingly left but the Euening before, by the valuckie aduice of Grove the Matter of his ship. Vpon the Intelligence given by their two ships, our Admirall that off a peece, and pretently cast about, and therewithall, wee in the other thips perceived casting up of Hats, and great shootes abourd the Admirall, for iou of this newes. And the like afterwards was done in the Vice-Admirals ship, and so passed throughout all the Fleete. Within some few houres after, we incountered, and tooke three Spanifo ships, comming from the Hanana, the greatest of them being about foure hundred tunnes, and esteemed to be a very rich thip, as well for the lading, as for the patterners that were in her. To this Spaniard, our thip called the Walthight being neereft, gaue Chale, and caufed her to ftricke, and yeelde : but yet my Lord Generall nafting after, would tuffer none but his owne Boate to goe aboord her, being full of good profoners, and pillage besides per lading, which was Cochynella, and other such rich Wares. This ship, and the other two that were in her company, being very good prises also, made to the Generall a relation of forty failes of Indian men, whereof tome eight were fraughted with the Kings Treature, that did diffenbarge with them from the Hanana, bound for Spaine. And as we after heard, the Garland, the Rimebow, the Dreadnaught, the Marigold, and others, fell among it fixteene faile of the richeit of this Indian Fleete, whereof they foundred one, and whileft 40 they were busie in seeking to take the spoile of her (as it was credibly reported) all the rest did escape, and recouer Tercera. But of this I speake as the generall voice went, and not vpon other affurance, for they were then separated from vs, and the rest of the Fleete: And therefore I must adde this conclusion, to defire that I may of the understanding fort be pardoned if in these relations I cannot truely, nor at large write the accidents, and courses of all their shops in particular, being no eye witnesse thereof, nor possibly could so be. For to doe that in a land army, or in a battaile is very bard, and much more in a Sea Voyage confisting of fo many (hips sometimes separated.

A Counfell.

Vpon intelligence of this escaping, and patting by to voluckily of these Indian Ships, we were all much perplexed. For by that chance, and by our vnfortunate haft from Gratiofa, but the very night before, wee faw that Euen, the wrath of deftiny denied to make vs fo happy, as to bee ma- 50 thers of fo great a fortune, as then had fallen into our laps, if wee had not fill followed all those counfells that fell out to the world. Notwithstanding, with all the speed wee could make, we instantly followed after them to Tercera, where they were entred some fixe houres before vs , and had moored their Ships fait under the Towne and Fort, being one of the strongest pieres of all Europe. There wee might aloofe behold them fafe within the Road; which was a great Inlet invironed with a high Land, in manner of Peninfula; fo as the Shippes lay under the command of two ftrong Fortifications, a place neither fit nor politible for our Ships to follow them, except we had meant, that they should have there stuck tast for comming out againe. Now was there a generall countell called aboord the Admirall, what courfe to take heerein, and many great aduentures proposed and offered to bee attempted, by some Coronels and Captaines, with Boates and 60 Pinnaces for the landing of men, to force those places, but all in vaine, and altogether visicationable. For whereas they, with one thousand fine hundred men, offered to take both the Iland and Forts, some others of the chiefest Sea-Commanders (in their judgements, well knowing the great difficultie to Land men, and Munitions on fo disaduantagious a place, and in so cuils a season of the yeere ; beildes the great ftrength of the Fortifications, fo well furnished at that time by this new arruall) were veterly against it, as a matter friuolous, and of more apparant danger to our felues, then to the Enemy, and for it yeel led fundry reasons. All which these Coronels feemed to account light or, and would needs in great branery, still vige the vindertaking of it, if they might have but the proportion of one thouland five hundred men, before spoken of; which the General. himselfe feemed greatly to allow, and infift youn, and therefore of necessitie to be yeelded vnto by the inferiour Commanders.

But our Vice-Admirall, the Lord Thomas Howard, finding indeed the marke whereat fome of our great Captaines shot, to wit, that it would have ferued their turnes to have vaunted, that if the to Vice-Admirall, and Reare-Admirall had beene willing to this enterprife, and not croffed it by counter counsells, the Spanib Fleet and Treature (ov maffering the Hands of Tercera) might baut been recovered his Lording resolved either to tie them to their pretended resolutions, of to make the miles, that they could not ferue themselves of him, by any such finenesse & pretence. And therfore told the general plainly, that if indeed he would fo willingly have it attempted, himfelfe, and the Reare-Admitall for their parts would be forward and readie to aduenture as farre as any others. And moreover, the better to inable the action, faid, that they would undertake to find him three thousand strong and able men, to spare out of the Fleet, and yet leave the Nauie sufficiently manned. And therefore ((aid they) if your Lordship fee no other reasons to let or hinder this offered accemp; there shal be no want of so many men as we speake of, which is double the num-20 ber that was de nanded. But voon this constant offer, the matter was againe debated, and grew fomewhat colder, being better digested. So as in conclusion it was deemed inconvenient, and impossible to be effected, as our Forces and helpes, and theirs at that time stood, and the time of the yeere fo farre spent, and the winds and the Seas growne fo tempestuous for landing in Boats. But if this offer had not bin made, then, the relinquishing of these glorious motions, and attempts, had bin laid upon the backwardnesse and disswarions of the Sea-men, which was well enough perceiued, and therefore accordingly answered. These unseasonable ofers, and Braua loes, puts me in mind of the like inconsiderate unfortunate alti- touching rash on of Sir R. Greenfield in the Reuenge, who being Vice-Admirall to the fame Lord Thomas onless and Howard Admirall in a journey to these llands in certains of the Queenes Ships, they fortuned to meet Sir R. Granuile 30 mith a great Fleet of the King of Spaines, neere to the Ile of Flores, confifting of fo many buge and mighty his flory you

Gallions, as was no was fit for them to undertake being in number and force three times as firong as ours have before, 1944, And therefore fitter to be warily dealt withall, then raftly admentured voon Wherefore the Admi- which perhips rall (out of the due confideration and indgement of the office, and place bee beld, as also for that at bis re- may formatic turne bome, bee was to give a frict account of the charge committed unto bim) thought it fit to keepe fill him. aloofe, and in the weather of this powerful Nauie, and so to fight with them at his best advantage, off, and on, as occasion ferned, or elfe to free himfelfe from them if need required : For his Ships being morenmable, yare, and fwift, then the Spaniards, it had bin a groffe errour to have thrust himselfe wilfully in amorest them, and so to give them the advantage of boarding, being high and mighty built Ships through-ly manned and full of last, and the manner of fight, by boording most advantageous for those buge Gallions. 40 Besides being as they were all men of Warre, and thruce as many as the English, and no other benefit to bee out by boording them, but blowes, and the bazard of battaile, which is uncertaine victory; it behoe. med him admitedly to carry him felfe, and rather to follow the heedy fleps of a Pabius Maximus, then the pies beadie fury of a Terentius Varro. But bis Vice- Admirall, being indeed a man very wilfull, and violent in his courses, could in no wife be personaded to follow his Admirall, and his conforts. But thrusting himfelferally in amongst the Spaniards, those mighty Vessels being a Sea-boord, and some of them getting into the weather of him, so becalmed all his sayles , as that hee could not use the benefit of working upon a wind to bis best aduantage, nor free bimselse of them when bee would, but was clapt abourd by two or three of them; where to redeeme his errour, seeing hee had brought himselfe so undiscreetly into a desperate worke, be very resolutely fought, and made long relistance, to the great annoyance and loss of the Allar-30 lants. But in the end, being haben and beaten to fitters with their great Ordnance, and oppressed with the multitude of them, comming in fresh upon him, was by mayne force mastered, and yet distaining to reeld. for that bee had received his deaths wound in the fight, fought by all meanes to have blowne up his Ship, by festing fire on bis owne Powder roopie, and therewitball to have destroyed as many of the Spaniards as lay aboordhim; but by the care of his Captaine (whose name was Laughorne) was with stood and premented. A right antiem Roman resolution but sement at too much varying from the true Christian Religion; to draw a violent and sudden death on so many soules, for the better gracing of his particular er. conly Ship of your, And in this fort by his owne wilfulnesse, brought he one of the Royall Naute, into the power and the Nauy Royall possession of the Spaniaris, which during all the Warrer, nener before nor after they could obtaine. And a all, possessed faire grace of God it was , that his fond example had not inticed more of them, at the same time to the like by the Spane

60 felly and ruine. Now the best that bee could hope for, was after the exchanging of some great that with ards and deace them to have come of againe of hee could. A bravery to [mall purpofe, for to fabilite them, was not in the ly boud's power of all the English, if they bad beene as many more in all likelihood and reason. Vpon which grounds wife Commanders ought to build their resolutions, before they put themselves to the bazard of battaile. Besides, in truth is was a very insolent and disorderly part, for a Vice-Admiral, being a man of his yeares from the opinion of all his Conforts, onely to hid him selfe voluntarily to so foolub and bitter a banquet wherein bee could be but loft. And bard would it be for Generalls, and Chiefe Commanders to fulfill their

Infractions, or fatisfie that which is expected at their bands, if they should be drawne on, or ingage them-

felmes by the vaine example of enery one that is carryed with a headdy humour, to follow his owne wilfull least to the assured losse of as many as were landed about that businesse. But (thankes be to God) 200d counsell prenailed, and prenented these bazards.

After that this diffoute was fo calmely concluded : our Generall himselfe, and the Lord e Mountier in the Defiance, and two or three other tall Ships, bare in as close along the shoare as they could, exchanging upon pleafure, fome fifteene or twentie great flot with them, to very little purpole, and to left the lie of Tercera, a place very ftronge both by Nature and Art, and at that time well flored with Men. Munition, and Treasure; by reason of the late arrurall of those Indian Ships. From thence wee returned agains to the He of Saint Michaells, which before on Michaelmoffe day wee made, and left then your this Intelligence. And now as foone as we were They arrive ontred into the Road, that lies before Saint Michaells Towne, wee let fall our Ancors, and there, at S. Michaells the Generall accompanied with divers of our chiefe Officers, comming abourd our Reare-Admirall, hung ont a Flag of Countell, where it was consulted about landing, and the taking of this good Town, which lay to gloriously before our eles, promising many rich rewards to the Victors: In the which there was a flight Fort towards the Seafide, but the Towne vnwalled. The Generall appointed that all Companies should bee made ready to land forthwith. But our Reare-Admirall defired his Lordship; that hee would first permit him to view the place, and to find out where the Army might best make a descent, because the Billowes about those slands doe sometimes fo roule from the Sea, as might eafily ouerturns the best Boates we had, as wee found by ex- H. How Sea. perience at Fajall, where wee had two long Boats ouerturned in landing, and Malter Thomas Rug-20 may also throwne with a Sea on the Rockes in his Boat. Our Generall at first, yeelded to the Reare-Admiralls request, for viewing a fit place. But as hee was putting off, and scarce gone from the Ships fide twentie paces, my Lord, flanding in the Gallery with Sir Christopher Blant, called him backe againe in great halt, and faid that he would not himselfe, and view it. Whereupon the Reare-Admirall returned againe, as my Lord commanded; and as his Lordship went out of the Ship into his Barge ynarmed altogether but with his Coller and Sword, and without either Shot or Pike to way to on him, the Reare-Admirall called aloud vnto him, and defired his Lordship to take his Caske, and Target proofe with him, it hee purposed to goe neere the shoare, feeing Boldnesse by there lay fo many Muskets on the reft, there to receive him. Whereumto my Lord answered, That hee would none, because hee distained to take any advantage of the Watermen that

But (in my opinion) though that answere much showed his valour, yet became it not the place that my Lord held, for in truth a Concratt onebt not to bee fo adventuring, and carelette of himfelfe open energy highe occasion, nor to goe warmed to places of monument persit. Homer describes the valuent Heroes, and brauest Leaders of the Greekes to be best armed: As Achilles, an excellent Armour framed by Vulcan. at the request of Thetis his mother, and Arax with his fewenfold fixeld. Infomuch as their very armes are famous even to these days , the we whereof now wee make scornefull. But they are no beaten Souldiers in the warres , that hold the fe opinions : for it is truly faid, that a great and wife General thould dre old. And I have read that famous Epaminondas, was fined by his Countrymen the Thebanes, for being too formard, and serning in a bassaile ill armed, alshough be wan the victory. But to our matter : After 40 that these landing places were viewed a farre off, and were not well liked, nor yet so neerely approached at that time, swithin Culuerin Shot (for there lay all along the fhoare aboue foure hundred Shot youn the reft, intrenched to beate on our Boats;) in conclusion, after many offers and jurusies made aloofe, the conveniences of that place, for landing was excepted against. Albeit in truth it was a faire and fandy beach (as all the Fleet might well perceine) and some foure or fine miles from the Towne, and Fort, and much more easie then that of Farall, where wee before wan our landing. And that this is most true many that were prefent (now living) and saw both,

And although our Generall himselfe, was very resolute and apt to undertake any good occasion of feruice, yet hee was then so led and accompanied with such politicke Land Captaines, as that of all the feruices which fell into confultations and deliberations, those most commonly. which were vnfeatable, were offered to bee undertaken, and things more likely and reasonable neglected. Whereby out affaires speed accordingly. And in this regard that this descent was not by my Lord Generall his viewers, allowed of, as fit for the Army to land at, to many Entignes being placed and intremehed there to impeach vs, it was prefently by another confultation agreed, that the Reare-Admirall should with all the strength of the Fleet, lye as neere before the Towne of Saint Michael, as comeniently they could, to hold them in expectation, whilethmy Lord Generall and the reft, with two thousand men imbarked into small Barkes and Pinnaces, fecretly in the night didconicy themselves about the point, to land at a Towne called Villa Villa I was Franca, fome fixe miles further then the first determinate landing. And for that purpose, they 60 had most of all our Boats with them, and three English men for their guides, that perfectly knew all the Hands and the Townes, by lone trade and living among it them. These three goxies affured our Generall both of a quiet landing, and of a very faire and lecret way, to march from thence to Saint Michaels Towne. Our troupes being thus shipped, and our Generall also, they made hast towardes Villa Franca, concest. For fo was that noble Paulus Emilius, and the Roman Armie with him loft, at the Battasle of Canges, in being constrained to second the footish brauery of Vario, his rash Colleague. And in the like

Rich Doi Torte unadusfed desperate fort, did that valiant Dube of Yorke, Richard Plantagenet, Father to Edward the Fourth, wilfully cast away himselfe, when with fine thousand men onily, contrary to the persuasions and counfell of all bis friends, out of the pride of his branery, bee would needs fally out of his Cafile of Sandall. and gine batt aile to the Queenes Army, that was twenty thousand strong : whereby his weate forces were quickely defeated, at Wakefield, and bimfelfe flaine, with his young fonne the Earle of Rutland. It is faid to bee the dutie of a creat Captaine, to feeke victory with at little loffe to himselfe, as may bee, and more military discipline thewed in making a faire and safe retrait, then in gining a furious and desperate charge. The experience whereof was well feere, in that gallant Souldier Sir John North, who wan as much Ha-Sir to Nortia. nour and Fame, by that braue, and well ordered retrait which bee m. . befor : Gaunt, as in any one piece offernice that ener bee did. We had also fresh in our memories, a Sea experiment of the very like tracicall succelle of Sir Richard Greenfield, in the liberall attempt of Peter de Stroffe, Admiral of a French Fleet, against a mightie Spanish Nany, commanded by the Marquelle of Sancta Cruce, at these Ilands. Where this Strolle out of a wilfull brauery, contrary to the better adnice of all his Captaines, and Mafiers, baning alreadie landed many braue troupes of Frenchmen, in the Ilands, as offistant to Don Anthonio, named King of Portugali, upon the first view would needes lay the Marqueffe and the Spanish Fleet aboord, being compassed of mightie buge Gallions, and the French but stender nimble Shos. Br which unequal match and foolsh daring he was beaten downe . ight, all his Nause destroyed (fauing the Count Brylack, and a few others of better indgement, that would not follow his vaine course) and himfelfe being taken prifoner, was aline most despitefully torne, and drawne afunder with two Ships. Thus lost Terribly exebe himselfe, and his bonour, brought many gallant Gentlemen and Son diers to a butcherly execution, and viterly thrust Don Anthonio from the possession of the lles of Afores, and confounded all those brave French troupes, which a little before he had placed in them. But in another manner, and with better fuccesseure our assaires generued, in the yeere 88, when that mightie Fleet of Spaine, which they termed 32

Example of 88 inuincible come to inuade vs. For them I remember, among it other good describine, and instructions for the Sea fight; it was straitly ordained, that none of our Ships Should voluntarily (if they could by any meanes anoid it) lay any Spaniards abourd, but alwayes to fight with them upon advantage, and indeanour by all meanes to keepe into the meather of them, and fo leave or take as occasion served, they comming to inuade, Inuinfible fleet and our end only to keep them from landing. The which direction was fo well ebferued, as that this innincible Fleet, for all their force and powerfull appearance, proved at last innifible, left many of their Ancors and good Ships behind them, got not, nor sunke any one of ours : but being fore gauled and beaten, with this manner of fight, and greatly affrighted with fire, and fuch like stratagems, were at last glad to packe away, as fast as they could out it the backe doore. I meane by the North Seas, round about Scotland, and Ireland : wherein they found a miferable and tedious flight, never baning gotten so much at a dish of our 40 fresh water, nor over lauded one man (except prisoners) whon our Coass. Now, if our Admirall, the Lord Charles Howard had beene a wilfull Commander, flanding upon those vaine clorious termes of boording and affaulting the enemy, and not have proceeded by counfell and policie temperately, then had be done that which the Spaniards expected and defired, their Ships being fit for the purpose, and comming to boording and handy fight, might very well have distressed us, and so have bazarded both the Name, and the Kingdome together. But this noble Lord, as her was very fortunate and indicious in Sea service , so L. Admirall bee truely and wifely considered, how great a weight and charge lay on his indgement and trust, and therecommended. fore did accordingly, with great wisdome and temper marshall bis diffaires, to the onerthrow of his Enemies, to the perpetual bonour of bu name, and the victorious serving of his Prince and Countrey. This therefore may may fland for a Waxime and Caucat, to all great and wife Commanders, that to whom A 50 King or State commits the trust and directsin of an Army: It bridles him in the free vie of his owne conrage, or from expressing (upon energ temptation) his particular valour. For that forward humour of daring, is so be ved in younger yeares, before they arrive to the eplaces of dignitic or command; and then euer after, counsell should command their courage, alwayes we apping their heads in the Furre of the Foxe, and their Armes seldome in the Lyons skin, setting aside all respects of byaning or vaine glory, as did that Fabius Cunctator, of whom Ennius in prasse faith; Non ponebat enim rumores ante salutem. And the se presidents I have here taken occasion to record, thereby onely to shew what inconveniences and detriments doe follow such unbridled heat, and headdy humours, and to the contrary, what benefit and advantage is gained in the true vie of timely and temperate proceedings. For swely, if these desperate offers, made by the Land Souldiers, instigating our forward Generall to the taking of the Tercera, had rest resurned home with the scorne of a disgraced attempt. Besides, if the Adelantado with the Spanish Name had then chanced to have come on our backes, whileft our best men were ashnare ingaged about this desperate and unseafable enterprise, it might have turned to the destruction of the whole Fleet, or at the

where they arrived fafe, & were all landed by the next morning, without any manner of refiffance. For most of all the Town vpon their arrivall abandoned the Town, and we that were left under the command of the Reare-Admirall, in the best Ships before the Towne of Saint Michaells, did all the night give them perpetual Alarums, with Shot, Drummes, and Trumpets, in fuch Boats as were lett, sometimes in one place, sometimes in another, along it the shoare, where the Spaniards kept their Corps de Guards, and fiers, who were often in great amazements, calling, and running to and fro, thinking verily that wee were landing in that place or about it. And thus wee did to giue our Army thebetter, and more secret meanes to make their descent, and so to come vnlooked for on their backes , as their very way did lie , and might in truth very conveniently have beene performed. They being thus landed, wee in the Ships did all the next day looke out apace, hoping to fee our troupes come marching ouer the Hills and Plaines, that were perfect in our view : for the most part of the way that they were to come, being all alongst the Sea side, was in our fight more brim from the Ships by farre, then if wee had beene ashoare. But this good Towne of Villa Franca, had so welcomed and intertained our men., (being seated in a pleasant foyle, full of fruits, wines, and fresh victualls, and the Sellars stuffed so full of Oade and Wheat) as that our Army was content there to ingarrifon, without any further pursuit of Saint Michaels Towns, and there for fixe dayes together they lay feafting, and carrying aboard of Oade. Wheat. Salt, and other merchandife, into certaine private mens Ships that followed the Fleet, for fuch purpofes.

whilest wee all in vaine still gaped for their comming, which wee the rather thought would have bin at the last, for that in all this time, they never so much as sent word, to make vs partakers of their determination to the contrary, whereby they would be fure wee should neither participate any of their Commodities, nor fee the dilpofure of them; although twee cast many coniectures and aymed neere the marke, finding this lingring very ftrange. But, to doe right to euery man, I affure my selfe, our Generall had no benefit of these wares and commodities, being of a disposition too noble and bountifull to valiew such trifles worth his regard. For it had beene easie for him to have abounded with wealth and possessions, without following the fortune of the warres, or the hazard of the Seas, if hee had aymed at such common markes. But in this meane while, as weein the great Ships, ancored in Saint Michaels Road, there came in about the Point that lies westwards from the Towne, a small Brass man, and let fall his Ancor in the middest of 30 vs all. A little after him, wee might discerne aloose off a mightie huge Carack, bearing in with all fayles toward vs, whom thee tooke to bee the Spanish Armada. And the Brafil man confessed that hee thought the same also : for the King of Spainer men of Warre (when he makes Fleets) are compounded of the shipping of divers Nations, and therefore the more hardly to bee distinguished from ours, which was at that time compounded of English, and Holland Bottoms; befides one great Spanish Gallion, called the Saint Actem, and some other leiler Spanish Veffels that wee had taken before. Now there blew a ftiffe gale from the Land, ouer Saint Michaels Towne, in such fort, that shee must either put roome into the Sea, or fall vpon vs. For as the wind then flood, the could not run in with the Towne or Fort by no meanes, neither was it any part of their

The Carack ran her felfe on ground. She was fet on fire. Examples of Cades voyage.

As floone as wee had made her to bee a Carrack, wee tooke in all our Flags by a general commandement from our Reare-Admiral: and withall directions were given, that no manshould once weigh an Ancor, or shoot off a Peece, or put off a Boat, but with leave or order. All this while she still bare in with vs, with all fayles to the Boates end, when fuddenly one of the Holland Squadron(contrary to al discretion & the direction before) weighed his Ancors, hoised his top sailes, & made towards this Carack, now ready to double the Poynt that entred the Road where we lay: and when the Hollander came neere the Carack, hee prefently made two or three Shot at her. Whereupon sheediscouering vs to bee Enemies, changed her course, and at the very instant (in the view of vs al that observed it, as if shee had had the wind at her deuotion) the gale changed, & came full of the Seas: with the helpe whereof, and with the feare of falling into our hands, thee 50 tooke a resolution to runne her selfe a ground, hard under the Towne and Fort, Which done, from thence there presently came multitudes of Boats, fetching away their men and best wares, and that done, fiee was inftantly by them fet on fire in many places at once, being full of great Ordnance, as appeared by the report they made. Such is now the custome and obstinacie of all those Seafaring men under the Spanish surifdiction, as that by reason of the seuere order, set downe by the King to that effett, they will carelefty burne their Ships, and wares, if they can escape themselmes, vather then to grow to any composition to same balfe thereby. And the like was feene at Cades. by the Fleet that was ontwards bound for the Indies : who after they had entertained a parley with vs , to compound for their Ships, and all the merchandice, at a ranfome of balfe the valen : whilest they amufed us with this colourable presence, thereby they gained lines of lease of lone of their goods, and afterwards fet the 60 Shippes on fire, where they read. But this arguest has great senerate in the Soutraigne, as savery in

This Carrack was a Ship of infinite wealth, that at Saint Hellens watering as flee came from the East Indies, put ouer to Brail, and so coasted along ft the West Indies, and was fraughted with theriches and wares both of the East and West. Wee hasted all wee could when wee saw her a ground, tottering and reeling, with those few Boats wee had left, to have entred her. But before wee could make vs readie, or come neere her, being three miles off, thee was on light fire in many places, her Ordnance thundring off apace, and too hot to bee approached, much leffe to bee entred at that time, without incustable destruction. And yet such hast was made to have prevented this mischiefe, that divers had like by overcharging Boates and Pinnaces, to to have foundred in the Seas, the Billowes going very high. And in that case was our Reare. Admirall an mong it others, who for half to this banquet tooke his Row Barge, and was fo ill able in her to indure the Seas that were rough, and went high at that time, as that I by chance feeing him fo ill hefted, & in danger was faine to clap him aboord with a good frout shipboat that I was in having made hast also to that featt as fast as I could. But in conclusion wee came all too late, for the broth was growne to hot for our supping. To behold her thus fiaming was a grieuous fight to vs. but a most wretched spectacle for the Portugalls, so to see their goods by their owne deedes and fury. to perish with fire and water in a goodly vessell, judged to bee 1800. Tunnes at the least, Shee Carack of Was a whole night, and all the next day in burning, and in beholding her, you might have feene 1800, Tungo the very shape, Cordage, Masts, and Furniture of a Ship so perfectly in fire, as no Painter could have halfe fo well refembled it with Art or Colours. And when the was cleane confumed to the water, there arose still a great smoake out of the Sea for many houres after, by reason of fome close Decks full of Spices and Sugar under water, which the fire had taken hold of.

This Tragedy ouerpast, wee then fell agains to looke out for our Army comming, but all in vaine. For if in any time, for fixe dayes together after their landing, they had come forwards from Villa Franca, the Towne of Saint Michaels, and the Carack alfo bad beene our owne, fafe without question. For if our forces had in all that time innefted them felues of the Towne (which they might have done, there being usuber Walles nor Bulwackes to hold them out) the Carack would have runne her felfe a ground. under the Towns as thee did : . . if thee had, then had thee fallen into the hand; of our Generall. and his Trowner : ar, fine had kens a Sca-board, then had free fallen into the mercy of our Fleet, which by no meanes The conta have efeat ed. But it was a leffe then as inexestable as lamentable, for that no good rea-(on could bee yeelded (as was shought) nor durft bee demanded, why fo gallant a Company, fo cafily landed for to good a purpose, frould to long linger in a listle Towne, forfatting themfelnes and the whole Army, 10 upon Fruits and Wine, to the neglecting of the fermice determined. But it was manifest, that besides their pleasure and good cheer, the great flore of Oade, Corne, and Salt, did intice some Landmen of good tredite. (who had Ships there of their owne) rather to take the pencenbie, and prinate benefit thereof, then to una dergoe some paine and perill, for the winning of Saint Michaels Towns, for the publike good. And this was a piece of fernice very unforemately negtetted, but upon what good reason I could never learne. And I am personaded, that if his Lordship had built lefe upon some mens violent counsells and vaine conceits. bee might have done many things better, and long have lined in great prosperitie. But all his care was to content and winne unto bim, certaine Polititians and Marfballmen, whom notwithstanding (according to the custome of the world) hee found many times ungratefully to deale with him , to ferue their owner turnes, drawing birs withall into ambitious bumows, and affect ation of popularitie, which, with our Great 40 men rarely succeeds with. And very Grange it was, to see so many great fortunes lost in this one journer: but that the very Heavens did in them (like Commets) foreshow the beauty and lamentable desting, that traced our Generall towards his end, whose bright shining felicitie was some after eclipsed, and admirably metamorphofed into ruine and destruction. Onely this comfort remained to his friends, than bee ended his life with as great resolution, pietie, and penetencie, as was possible to bee expressed in the countenance or words of a man, vitterly disorced from the world, and wholly denoted to celestial Contemplation, to the undoubted comfort of his Soule.

We from the ships looking thus still in vaine, for those that neither come nor fent vnto vs. wherby we loft all opportunitie of watering and refreshing our felues ; for we in the Walffoite, and diuers of our Conforts, had not watered tince our fetting out from Plimonth) began to refolue to goe 50 to our Generall, feeing wee could neuer heare from him in all that time. And as we were entring into this deliberation, wee might perceive the Admiralls Ship by her Flag turning out from the point of Pilla Franca: And two dayes before, many of our great Ships had left the Reare-Admirall, contrary to the Generall his order, which wee durit not breake in the Wastine, by a late causat, because it was flat contrarie to that which was appointed by a Councell, and the Generall his command. But as foone as wee had descried the Admirall (by his Flag) putting roome; our Reare-Admirall tooke his Barge, and Captaine Morgan with him, and rowed to him: and the same night sent Captaine Morgan backe againe, with directions in the Generalls name, to command all the Fleet to weigh, and to come for Villa Franca. This was no little oriefe to VI all. that had to long and diligently maited on Saint Michaels Towne, and looked to have had a better account 60 of that place, then so harely and absuptly to leave it after all these offers. And (to say the truth) it was either a große overlight, or a wilfull fault mexculuble to the State, that it was not in better fort manna. ged. For (no diubt) they would willingly have ransomed their Towns, rather then have abidden the fortune of the Warres by Sword and Fire, and wee had among it us , men of sufficient experience to deale in fuch compositions, which (for ought I know) they might doe. Thus, with griefe and discontent we left Saint Michaels good Towne, the Inhabitants whereof waving their Auncients, and shooting off their Ordnance in great joy triumphed to see this vnexpected modest departure of the whole Fleet, on a fudden without any further trouble: And to mee it was ftrange to fee the Coronelle and Captaines, that a little before were to forward and violent to have landed at the Tercera, being a place to difficult to accempt, and of to great firength, to bee now to flow to come forwards to Saint Michaels Towne, that had neither Ditch nor Wall about it, they being already landed

But now approached the time of the yeere, that brings withit violent flormes, and extreme foule weather to those Ilands. In regard whereof, as also for that opportunitie was now pastof doing any more good to our selues, or damage to our Enemies; vpon the meeting of the whole Fleet before Villa Franca, a generall commandement was given, that all forts should with all freed renaire abourd their owne Ships, for the Wind and Seas began to rife too high to ride there any longer. And now our last worke, was to prouide for our returning againe into England: And therupon all the haft and preparation that could bee, was made with the helpe of the imall Pinnaces and Boates to convey all our troupes aboord. Wherein, the best fort of Commanders spared no paines nor travaile, and especially our Generall himselfe, who in his owne person was twice in very great danger of tumbing into the Seas, about the imbarking of the Souldiers, in ouercharging his own Boat with those voruely people, among it whom at such times, it is hard to keep any order or moderation. And much trouble there was (confidering the rough weather, and how the Seas rowled) to get all our Land men aboord. Besides, our Ships began to find more tickle ryding 20 in that wild Road, then wee should have done eight dayes before at Gratiofa, where wee lost the Indian Fleet by tarrying one night. But now at our departure from Villa Franca, for a farewell the Spaniards and Portugues prefented vs with a braue skirmish, which being throughly answe-Knights, made, red, the Generall there did make certaine Knights. Our Army being thus brought aboord, and many ficke men amongst them, by reason of their lauish diet ashoare, where they more weak ened themselves then the Every. This Towne also was left intire, neither fired not demolished, But whon what considerations I know not, whelfe out of gratitude for the hospitalitie, Oade, Come, and Salt, which it had alreadie yeelded : or else out of a provident regard to leave them in case to bee able to entertaine vs another time, or rather for some pettie ransome to some particular perfons that were more capable then our Generall, in vouchfafing to take any benefit whatfo- 30 euer. For fure I am, that fome reason there was, if I could light on it, wherein the Oademongers, and Corne Merchants might doe well to helpe mee, for they (I thinke) can ayme neerest to the marke. The ninth of October, 1 597. wee fet faile from Villa Franca for England, with a faire leading winde for three or foure dayes together, and then it grew scanter and icanter, and at last starke nought and flat in our teeths, with fuch great flor nes, foule weather, and exceeding high grown Seas, as that many of our Fleet were much puzzeled in the nights in falling foule one of another, Infomuch that the Mary Rose, by meere carelefnesse of the Matter, and his Mates, had like to liane stemmed the Wast fore, if wee had not beene very carefull and diligent to avoid the sudden and emminent danger: which, yet wee escaped to narrowly, as that the Mary Rofe, with her 40 Beake head, tore away all the Gallery on the Lardboord fide of the Wastfpite. This iterme on a fudden separated all the Fleet, and wee in the Wastipite after this shocke, had fundry dangerous leakes breake out vpon vs , in such fort , as that much to doe wee had by pumping and all other meanes to keepe her aboue water, being a very new thip, but withall the weakelt built Vessell that ever Iwam in the Seas of her burden, and carrying tuch great store of huge Ordnance as shee did, most of the which wee were inforced to strike downe into hold, to ease her labouring sides that hoursly were like to flye afunder. Befides all this, wee were in fo great want of Fresh-water and drinke, as that I offered to give to one of the Victuallers of the Fleet, fixe Chefts of Su-Want of water. gar, for fixe Hog sheads of Fresh-water, and yet could not have it at any hand : Infomuch as wee were faine to begin to fet our great Stills on worke, to prouide for the worst the best wee could. 13 For if the forme had longer held in that violence, wee might have taken the choice, whether we would haue beene drenched in the Salt-water, or choaked aboord our Ship for want of fresh. For with the extreamitie of this Northeafterly florme, we were put back cleane from our course and coalt, into no little def paire. And as wee in the Waftfpite, fo were all the reft of the Fleet (as I after learned) difperfed atunder, infomuch that fearcefly two flips in all the Nauie kept company together. But at lait it pleased God, to fend vs more faire and fit windes, wherewith wee brought our felues againe into our due course, and within three or foure daves wee began to meet with one another, stragbing and ranging in the Seas. And after that, wee in the Wall pig bt chanced alto to descry our Generall, by his mayne Flag (as farre as wee could ken) wavted on onely with two little Barkes, who fixe or feuen dayes before, was attended with fourescore layle of 60 good Ships. A true type of this worlds inconflant pempe, which the winde and Seas did faithfully teach vs not to build too much vpon. And I would our noble Generall, for his owns fake and better fortune, had made that good observation thereof.

When wee had thus met our Generall, jand had hayled and faluted que another, with all the joy that might bee, wee conferred of our course, and began to consule thereof with the adulfe of our Masters and Pylots. Wherein, ours in the Wast-spight somewhat varyed from the opinion of the Generals Nauigatours, but yet we submitted our felues, and our skill, to the wisedome and authoritie of his Ship, whose Directions wee were to follow. And withall, wee made knowne vnto his Lordship our great leakes, and scarsitie of Drinke, who told vs very Honourably, that we should want no helpe that hee could yeeld vs, and therefore he straightly charged vs to keepe his courfe, and to follow his Light, which wee did obserue, though our Master was very vnwilling thereunto, affuring himfelfe, that our Generals Matter was miftaken, and besides his course. by too much crediting the periwasions and Art of one John Danis a great Nauigator reputed,

10 who at that time fayled much of his Pilotage, and coniecture for the Sleene, to the no little hazard of the whole Fleet, as afterwards was seene. During this forenamed Storme, fundry Birds came flying into our Ships, when wee were two hundred leagues from our owne Coast. First. there fell into vs an Onle, then a Taffell, and a Falcon, one of the which wee tooke, and brought Birde. into England, then at the laft a Done lighted on our Maine-yard, which we all liked well, and tooke it as a prefage of faire weather towards, and fo (thankes bee to God) it succeeded presently after two dayes. After wee had thus met with our Generall, and being well aduanced on our way for the Sleene, and aswe conicctured not farre from the entrance of the Channell, wee began of all hands to fall a founding for ground, and the next day found it, though indeed by that founding I faw few the wifer, or the more affored of the Coalt. For it was the Banke of surer, but

20 none could fay fo, nor then fo judge it, but onely the Matter of our Ship, whose name was Broadbant, a carefull man and a right good Marriner. For in the Generals thip, they were all of a contrary opinion, and according to their Errour shaped their course, with straight commandement given to vs, and to the reft that were in his traine, to rollow his Light and course. The which we did very diligently, my felfe indeed being most in fault for it. For the Master was loath to to doe. but that I viged our dutie to the Generals commandement, and our danger in breaking it by former experience. And therefore I watched, and flood by the Helme, and Bitackle, most part of that night, to fee it performed, though with much repining of the Matter, and his Mates, against this dangerous Course as they tearme it.

This founding of ours, fo much in practice, and yet many times bringing no great certainty withall. 30 makes me now call to minde, an odde conceit and speech of a Spanish Prisoner, which the Generall game me in this Journey, but never yeelded me other Ransome then some faire promises and smooth discourses: For hee after confened or bribedbis keeper (a Captaine of a Pinnace) to whom I had committed bins in charge, and very cleanely conneyed himselfe away, without ever bidding me farewell. Howbest others found better fruites of their Prisoners, which the Generall game unto them.

This Spaniard of mine was a Gentleman, and a Souldier, but had of late geeres, traded the West Indies by may of Merchandize: With whom I one day talking and discoursing of their Voyages and Nawir ations (wherein hee was very well experienced) amongst other things bee told me, that in their Nania gation from the Indies, they fought out Spaine in a more certaine and gallant manner, then wee did England. For (faid he) wee seeke out our Coast aisst with our Eyes, by the Heavens, by the Sunne. and 40 Starres, and with the vice of Art, and Instruments, w buch seldome or never fayles. But you (laid be) that feeke for England, when you are to runne into narrow Seas, are (as I heave fay) inforced for your furest Directions (like men blindfold) to fearch under the water, and to ferape with Lead and Tallow to the bottome for Bankes, Sands, and Shelnes, as if you would rake Hell for instructions; to finde out the Channell, which you call the Sleene, and yet for all your foundings, are oftentimes mistaken. I answered him againe, indeed it was true, that our Humilitie taught vs, to goe by the ground : Whereas their Pride led them to gaze about the Clouds, and by that meanes fo dazeled their Eyes, as that they did often Sumble upon such men of Warre, that now vied as well to found Spanish Pockets, as the English Sleene. Whereat my Spaniard smiling, and shaking his Head, Said, bee could not well denie it, bauing so lately made too true experience thereof, For indeed bee was throughly rifled and ranfacks of good Short Wares,

50 before that ever bee came to my hands. These words of his I remembred, and found true upon our sonndings, and the uncertaine coniectures thereof, with varieties of opinions.

For after wee had all found ground, all that Night wee held on so precisely in following our Generals light, as that very earely in the Morning, with the first peepe of day, wee in the Wast-fright looking about, found our selves on the North-fide of Sylley. Which when with cold comfort wee had perfectly made, and perceived with all our narrow escapes in that darke Night, hard alongst the Rockes called the Billion, and his Clarkes : wee began of all hands to looke out for our comforts. And then wee diferyed our Generall and divers with him. advanced some three leagues before vs, bearing in with all Sayles towards the Coast of Wales.

The morning was very close and foggie, and the Generall steering North-east, in stead of Eaft and by North, ranne right with the Sands of the Welch Coaft, on which in that darke weather hee had stricken; and perished, if hee had held on, but a few houres longer. But on the contrary, although wee reichted not to lofe the fight of his Lanthorne, yet wee kept our felues as farre to the East as wee could, and yet wee were scarce able to double Siller, but feil close aboord it, and a little to the North of it, at the breake of day. All which when I perceived

I be later Watch being mine, and the Reare Admirai, being gone to rest) I did instantly coman the Mafter Gunner to fnoot off a great Piece to cause them to looke about, but both our ni it is, and the Matter Gunner were fo mad at me for forcing them to follow this course, as that out hardly have suffered a warning Piece to bee shot, but said, they deserved totalte the or the rowne wilfulnesse, having brought themselues and all the Fleet, cleane out of the

into this danger. And out of very rage and discontent, these men had quite forgotten all of Charitie, and would by no meanes have bestowed a shot vpon them, to alter them fi m that vnfafe courie, but that I vrged their Dutie, and inforced them to shoot, and shoot ao line three or foure times, one after another, much against their wills.

Whereupon we might within a little time, plainly percente our Admirall with all his Traine, to to tacke about finding their owne Errours, as afterwards they confelled. And therefore prefently they beat it up, to double the Cape of Silley, thereby to enter the Sleene, which with muchadoe they performed. But we in the Wast-fright, being now by this time frot in along it the North fide of Cornewall, almost as farre as Saint Ines, our ship being extreame weake and leakie, and our Drinke and Water come to the lait cait, at very bare allowance, wee durst not againe put to the Seas in these wants, and in a Vessell so ill able to beat it vp against the winde, to double againe the Point of Siller, whereby to recouer the Sleene. And therefore food along it the Coaft. and that night anchored before Saint Ines, where wee found fundry Spanish Carauels, and Flee-boates of the Spanil Fleet, which was fet out under the Adelantado, to have incountred vs at our returne from the Ilands, but were all dispersed and toffed with the same Storme, that before had scattered 20 vs, which fell our very happily. For if wee had met, wee must have tryed the Battell, chiefely by Boording, or elfe trufted to our Sayles, for that our best and greatest Ordnance (for the ease of our Ships in these stormes) were stricken downe under hold. So that wee should have found great disaduantage, to have incountred with a Nauie, comming strong and fresh from the Maine, and wee tired, and feattered a funder, with a long and painfull Voyage. Herein was Gods fauour and mercy mightily shewed towards all sides : For by this Storme, which so furiously for the time afflicted vs, were wee, and that Spanish Fleet under the Adelantado seuered, and kept from incountring, which had coft much blood, and mischiese; and to say a truth, in all likelihood, the worst might have fallen to our shares.

For when wee had left the Hands and were once croffe fayled for England. I observed, that be- 20 fore the Storme, divers of our best Ships, made all the haste they could homewards, never following nor attending the Admirals course, nor light. Which is an Errour too much vied amongst vs . and very diforderly and dangerous; as would have beene well found, if the Adelantado had then met with any of those straglers, or with the Admirall himselfe homewards bound, so sten derly accompanied.

Death of Sir

Lord Bargh.

Which manner of disorder and scattering, in the Conduct of a Royall Nauie, especially in so long a Voyage, is very fit to bee ftraightly reformed.

These Spanish Flee-boates and Carauels, had made many landings by stealth, on that side of Cornewall, and put the Countrey in great frights, and amazements : especially, vpon the report of a great Fleet, that was comming after them for England. Whereupon our Reere Admirall from 40 before the Saint Iner, left the Seas, and went a Land, to take some order for the Countrey of Cornewall, whereof hee was then her Maiesties Lieutenant, seeing it then in much amazement and feare, and so meant to goe over land to Planouth, there to meet with our Generall.

From the Road of Saint Ines, the next morning, wee in the Walt-fright fet fayle for Kingroad, and met with fuch foule weather, as that ouer against the flat Holmes, shee brake againe her Maine yard, which was before broken, and new fished in the beginning of this Voyage. But at last, with much adoe wee brought her about, to Kingroad, and within a few dayes after moored her fafe in Hungroad; where I tooke speedie order for the paying, and discharging of her men, at the Spaniards cost, and also for the repayring of her decayes. By this time wee also had newes, that our Admirall and the rest of our Fleet, were safely met, 50 and arrived at Plimouth. And at the same instant also wee had intelligence, by a small man of Brafill, but newly come from Corke in Ireland, that Sir Iohn Norris Pretident of Munfter, and the Lord Bureh Deputie of Ireland, were both lately decessed.

Of which two men, her Maiestie and the Realme had no small losse, being both Martiall men of as great worth, and feruice, as England bred in many yeeres before. And although it be no part of this matter to speake of them, yet their Deathes, being divulged to vs at the same time, cannot be thought write, or voworthy (by the way) heere to be remembred and lamented.

After I had thus taken order with the Officers of the Ship at Briffoll, I received Letters from the Lord Treaturer, and the Lord Admirall, for the accomplishing of that, which I had already (out of due confideration) gone in hand withall : I meane the discharging and paying of the 60 Marriners and Souldiers, being to the number of foure hundred men, which would have growne toa great, and needleffe expense, to have kept them in pay and victuals untill fuch time as I could haue fent vnto the Court, to receiue directions backe againe for the fame. And therefore did first take up monies upon credit, and then by the Drum make knowne in Eriston, that there were Sugars. Brailwood, and Fernanbuck aboord o r Ships, which I would prefenely make fale of, to those that would give most for it, and not merchand it vinder hand, hor in feerer, to the premdice and decenting of her Maieffie. And therefore with the knowledge and admice of the Mafter, the Purfer, and Boatiwaine of the Ship, and the Cuftomer, and Searcher of Brillow, I landed those Wares in fate Cellers, and fold them to the best Chapmen in publique, testified under the hands of their Officers of the Citie, and of the Ship, for my discharge in that behalie, and made thereof five hundre's pounds. The which fumme I delivered to one Asken then Puffer of the Wast-forght, to the end that hee by his Booke might pay the Marriners, and the Souldiers by the Powle, as a care of mine tor those poore-men vnder my Charge, which was duely performed.

The which I have beene the more precise to remember and notifie, for that I took e no finall paines and care . in getting those Sugars, and Brafill wood abourd us, out of a torne Brafill war, that was ready to founder in the Seat before Saint Michaels, and abandoned to any that would adventure to goe absord her, to feish away the lading. Which bufineffe (in that vacant time that the Armie lay at Villa Franca, and we before S. Michaels Towne) I put my felfe, and my Marriners onto. And I had not fo much paines and travell in the getting, as trouble and vex ation afterwards to preferie it, whilest it was abourd, when we came to Kingroad, from the purloyning and flealing of the Martiners, and Officers of the Ship. And to fay no more but a truth, I dare thus much anouch, and infifie, that of there had beene in Come other of her Maiesties thips the like regard for these goods that were gotten, and of the Prizes taben in this lourner, and as faithfully answered as were these, that then for all the crosses and errours, that 20 had bappened, it bad fully returned to ber Maiestie, the double value of all the Charges, she had beene as for this Voyage. But it was frange to jee, what careleffe courfes were held in all fuch all sons. as were let out by the State, and what poore returnes were made agains into the Exchequer. And therefore more Grange, that the Prince could subsist so often to fet out, fuch chargeable Voyages, without any manner of getting, more then to particuler perfons. For fo fell it out before in the Indian Voyage, when Sancto Domingo, and Cartagena were taken, and facte by Sir Francis Drake, and when Cades in Spaine was loffe in many Surprised, and facht by the Englin Armie, where was infinite wealth. But shat of Lisbons in Portu- Expeditions. gall, undertaken by Sir Iohn Nottis, where the Suburbes did so abound with Merchandize and Spicerie, being wholly at the mercy and disposition of our Armie, was to be excused; for that our Ships kept not promise with bim, in comming up the River, that should have both affisted the land Armie with Muni-20 tion and Victuals, and also carried away those Spiceries and rich Merchandize : wherem the Sea-men were greatly wanting, and taxed by the generall voyce. But in this Voyage, wee all faw and mem, that there were besides Braill men, three good Prizes taken that came from the Hauana, laden with Cochrwella, and other rich Merchandize, besides the Silver, Gold, Pearle, Cinet, Mushe, Amber-greece, which was amongst the Passengers. And those three Prizes (whereofone was about 400. Tunnes, by the report of those Merchants that same in them) were faid, and valued to bee richly worth about four bundred shouland Duckets. At the taking of them I flood in our Gallerie in the Walt fpight, with the Reere Admirall, and wee halled and called unto some, to inquire of their lading and Merchandize, and from what places they came, whereby wee learned, that they were come from the Hauana, very rich, and at the least to the value abone faid, Wherenpon our Reere Admiral faid unto me in private, that although wee an Thould be little the better for these rich Prizes, yet he was beartily glad for our General's sake : because they would in good fort que contentment to ber Maieffie, fo that there should bee no repining against the poore Lord, for the expense of the Voyage, And for my better facisfaction in the value of them, I had canfed mine owne Prisoner to give me notice of the Ships, wherein hee had Adnentures, and according to the Rates thereof let downe upon his owne knowledge; those three Ships could not be so little worth, as they all had formerly affirmed. Now if wee doe but looke into the bufbandrie and promidence of former Ages. and of the mightiest Empire, and best governed State that over was, wee foul plainely fee, that they ever scoke a more strict and suft account of the benefit of their gettings and Victories. And that it was an effeciall regard of the Roman Confuls, and Generals, at their returne from a profeerous Warre, to render a. plentifull gaine into the publique Treasurie, which made their State still able to subsist in their great altions. And many times their greatest and worthiest Captaines were deepely called in question, for imbele-

St. ling any part of fuch gettings, as amongst others, was that famous Scipio, furnamed Africanus, profecuted in that kinde by the Petil j, notwithstanding bu many great services to the Common wealth. But 1 3 1 3 what became of all these our gettings God knowes. Onely I beare, that there was a Composition made afterwards with her Maiestie for the Cochynella, and other Merchandize, not to a third part of that it was worth. For neither that, nor yet any of the other riches, could truely come to light or publique knowledge. because they were never faithfully certified under the hands and testimonies of sufficient Officers, when they were first taken : nor any of that which was preserved fold when wee came home , but onely to the Buyers aduantage. And yet in Conclusion, they that had fo played the wife Stewards, in fo providing for themselves, and their followers, had all the grace and gaine, from those that had more carefully and 60 suftly intended the publique Service. But this generall neglect of truth and merit throughout the world is the came, that to few doe apply to fillow those sincere and unprofitable courses : especially, seeing how many doe daily, by fraud and flatterie, finde horter and smoother wayes to Honours, wealth, and preferment : Enen beyond all measure and expectation.

VVE have now compassed the World in the Courses of so many Planets, every of which had a peculiar wandering, and yet none erring from the publike benefit of the Vniuerse. And as in Geometricall compasses one stoocies to fixed in the Centre, whiles the other mooveth in the Circumsterence, so is it with Parches and his Pilgrimes, in this Geographicall compassing: they have their owne motions, but ordered in this Circumsterence, from, for, and by him which abideth at home in his Centre, and sever travelled two hundred miles from Thaxted in Essex (lately adorned and augmented with Franchises by his Maiestie) where hee was borne. All their lines tend to this Centre, and this Centre to the Basis and Ground thereof, that is to his Countrey, to the honour and benefit whereof, he and all his are due. All Nations dance in this Round to doe the English Service, and English Travellers here enioy the Mayne, others the By, to attend, and with their Travels to perfect the English, at less the knowledge of the World to the 20 English.

CHAP.14.$.2. The Conclusion of the Worke.

Yea, in this English Centre also I have chosen the Centre of that Centre, the Renowmed Name of Queene Elizabeth, to which, because Mortalitie hath deprined vs of Her Person, wee have added that of King I Ames, the All that is lest vs of Queene Elizabeth, and more then that will in further perfection of Sexe and Arts. With those aussicious Names, as the saire Starres in the Constellations of both Poles, our Pilgrimes begaine their Progresse; by the Light of those two Eyes of Great Britiains, they have taken view of the World, and therefore heere wee end in our Pilgrimage with 10 those two ausspicious Names.

His Maiestie first (for Brute is uncertaine) hathcombined a Trinitie of Kingdomes into an Vnitie, Fecit est in gentem warm, & made the Ocean the Wall to his Inheritance, hath rooted out the wonted barbarisme of Borderers, of Scottish Fewds, of English Duells, of trish Bogges; hath confirmed and settled those cruder and more indigested beginnings of our prospertite; shath enioyed sourraignet longer then cuer did any of Eritaines Sourraignes (and still of till may we long long enioy him) hath given somanisod securitie against the extreamest and most farall rigor, both in number, weight and worth of Royall pledges.

Salomon then David, in this also that He is, and we enjoy his present Sunshine : in regard of posteritie not onely sowing thereto the fruit of his bodie, but of his learned mind, like a Salomon indeed by voluminous Writings, and not (which is more viefuall to Princes, with apophthegme-flashes, recorded by others like Saul sometime among the Prophets; a Miracle and Oracle both, this in polemicall. politicall, problematicall, apocalypticall, positive Theology, and Bookes of devotion also; that, in that his Royall body hath had the honour not to be polluted with women; aboue men, aboue Salemon. And as wee haue trauelled abroad that to wee may bring forraine rarities home, wee find no greater raritie abroad or at home then his Maiestie, the Father of the Clergie, the raiser of so many Families to honour, and of honours to Families; whose bountie and elemencie none deny, (let others beware least they perhaps have enilleyes, because his is good) so honoured of his Subjects with awfull love, with louing awe, that himselfe hath professed no King herein his superiour : and we can, and all History will professe with vs. that England neuer enjoyed better daies then under her deceased Mother, and the present Pater Patria, who hath secured Britaine in peace and prosperitie, whiles all Christian Kingdomes haue beene shaken with warres: and that which alone hath escaped the Lions, hath beene bitten by the Adder, the Spanish Dominions being coasted, braued, spoiled of thousands of their people, besides wealth and security. by the basest of enemies, the Algier Pirates. Thus at home doth Great Britain enion this Gem of Goodnes, the best part of the Ring of the worlds Greatnes: & abroad. we fee that as Gods Steward to others also, His Maiestie hath ballanced the neerer World by his prudence, by inflice of commerce visited the remoter, by trueft fortirude without wrong to any man conquered the furthest North, and by justell temperance disposed the overflowing numbers of his Subjects, not in Intrusions and Inuasions of weaker Neighbours, but in the spacious American Regions, 20 (some thinly, others not all inhabited) to breed New Britaines in another World. We have given Voyages thorow this Booke, and being now returned home and fixed on fo illustrious a Name, I meane to trauell no more, here I hang vp my Pilgrims weeds ; here I fixe my Tabernacle, it is good to bee here : wee have brought all the World to England, England it selfe to the greatest of her Soueraignes. King IANES.

But yet the mention of his Malesties Plantations, makes me grarefully to mention his gracious care of the same, even since the former Virginian Relations were printed. I then left Virginia with some griefe and sorrow, because of her 4 distracted Children and Fathers, the divisions and mutuall distrasts of the Company here and Planters there, sighing to God for them, who hath put in his Maiesties heart to compassionate these his Subiects, and having appointed the Gouerament to be according to a Commission in that Case directed, hath to surther Virginias gaine been content to suffer the loss of many thousands yeerly in his Royalle Customes arising out of Tobacco (so I have heard delivered in open Court) that so only that of the New Plantations may be even dible till the Colonie may re-couer greater strength.

His Maiethie is also pleased to send a Running Armie of Souldiers to scoure the P.

Countrey of the vaneighbourly malicious Naturalls; and to secure the planters from their prime ambushments. For openly they dare not attempt, but lurking in secret places attend aduantages. I feare not but so bright a Sunshine will quickly produce blessed effects.

Do their undertakers for three yeeres Tobacco, I luft not to speake, because I wish, and euen from that vindertaking, shortly expect better commodities from themee then Tobacco. I cannot but magnifie His Maiesties care, and manifest that also of the Hostofable Lords of the Councel, who after diligent search of Virginian Assaires the last yetre 1022 appointed Captaine John Harney, Master John Porty, Master Ab abian Perssey, Master Samuel wheathers to search further into the disabesand possible remedies of that plantations. In Februarie and Acareb last a general

rall Affembly was fummoned, and questions propounded to Sir Francis Wiat Gonernour and the faid Affembly: First, what places in the Countrey were best and most proper to be fortified or maintayned both against Indians or other Enemies. Secondly, concerning the prefent flate of the Colonie in reference to the Sauages. Thirdly, touching the hopes really to be conceived of the Plantation, and fourthby roughing the Meanes thereunto, &c. Their answere I know not whether I may publish in other things: In this one I presume, for better confirmation of what hath beene faid before to incite and confirme Mens affections to Virginia: namely to their answere to the third, subscribed (as the rest) by about thirty chiefe mens hands. We hold it to be one of the goodliest parts of the Earth, abounding with Nanigable rivers full of varietie of Fish and Fowle; falling from high and steepe Mountaines, which by generall relation of the Indians are rich with Mines of Gold, Siluer, and Copper: another Sea lying within fixe dayes journey beyond them, into which other Rivers descend. The soile fruitfull and apt to produce the best forts of commodities, replenished with many Trees for severall vses, Gums, Dves, Earths and Simples of admirable vertues; Vines and Mulberry Trees growing wild in great quantities; the Woods full of Deare, Turkies, and other Beafts and 20 Birds, Sir Thomas Gates and Sir Thomas Dales reports to the Company, concerning those praises were in no part hyperbolicall, nor any Countrey more worthy of a Princes care and supportance. Other reports concerning the healthfulnesse of the aire (especially where the ground is cleered of woods) and other needfull prouisions of the plantation in numbers of Men and Armes (which some had hyperbolically diffraced) and in all other necessaries, seeing the late massacre bath not permitred it better. I am glad & rejoyce that it is no worfe, and hope and pray for the fortunate increase thereof daily. I rejoyce also to heare (by one lately returned thence, Master Morell a Minister and man of credit) that the affaires of New England are There is re3° thriuing and hopefull, which two Colonies of Virginia and New England (with all port also of an their Neighbours) God make as Rachel and Leah , which two did build the house of English Colo-Israel, that they may multiply into thousands, and there in large the Israel of God, Northin Guieand the Churches Catholike confines, doing worthily in America, and being fa- 74 full contin mous in Great Britaine.
